KELOWNA (CP) — The first thing his re-elected Social Credit government will do is make peace with labor, says Premier Bill Bennett.

Bennett said he will ask labor leaders to meet him in Victoria to discuss "how we might better serve the people of the province not as special interest groups, but as serving B.C. interests."

Bennett said he feels no animosity towards labor.

"We are their government. I will work with them and for them."

Following his victory, Bennett told reporters that organized labor provided strong support for the New Democratic Party and he does not want to face that type of opposition again.

The legislature probably will be called early next month to pass legislation outlined in the throne speech in March and the budget which was introduced in early April, he added.

Bennett said he wasn't prepared to comment on changes to his cabinet. Three ministers — Agriculture Minister Cyril Shelford, Deregulation Minister Sam Bawlf and Tourism Minister Elwood Veitch — were defeated.

Bennett had attacked labor several times during the campaign, focusing most of his attention on union leaders, particularly Jim Kinnaird, B.C. Federation of Labor president.

Bennett said he was happy with his victory because the majority will allow him to provide positive government.

"In my view the future never looked better," he said. "We can look forward now to a greater level and measure of prosperity than ever before.

"It must be earned and the challenge is not only to government but to all of us to make things happen for our young, for our seniors, for all of us."

Socreds Win by Five, PCs, Grits Scratched

Premier Bill Bennett's Socred government edged back into office Thursday with a five seat majority in an election that eliminated the Tories and Liberals as viable forces in provincial politics.

Neither party elected an MLA in a two-way fight that saw the Socreds win 31 seats to 26 for Dave Barrett's NDP.

The election marks the first time since party politics were introduced to the province in 1903 that MLAs from only two parties will be represented in the house. Even in pre-CCF days, there was always at least one independent or labor member.

The closeness of the contest is illustrated by the popular vote percentages — 49 per cent for the Socreds to 46 per cent for the NDP.

The result marks almost total polarization of politics in the province and serves as a clear warning to Bennett's party which saw its 1975 lead of 17 seats over the NDP drop to just five.

When Bennett appoints a neutral speaker from within his ranks, that margin slips to four.

The NDP returned all 18 of its incumbents while the Socreds suffered a number of losses including three cabinet ministers.

Conservative leader Vic Stephens and Liberal leader Jev Tothill both suffered personal defeat as their parties were wiped out.

In the smaller pre-redistribution 55 seat legislature in 1975, the Socreds held 35 seats, the NDP 18 and the Tories and Liberals one each.

The Socreds held the same 49 per cent of the popular vote they did last time.

Despite the loss, the bright note for the NDP was the climb from 39 per cent to 46 per cent this time — the best the party has ever done in B.C., even when it formed the government in 1972.

Bennett who was the first declared winner in the province (the CBC computer declared his victory at 8:22 p.m.) was somewhat subdued as the rest of the results came in from around the province.

He urged Barrett and the NDP to work with his government without confrontation for the good of all British Columbians.

Bennett said a June session of the legislature is likely, but he offered no hints as to the cabinet layout of his new government.

One observer pointed out the impressive NDP percentage means Bennett can never again run to the people with the fear campaign that the "Socialist hordes are at the gate," since nearly one in every two B.C.

TV Set Upstages 'The Real Thing'

They don't call it the age of image politics for nothing.

Throughout the campaign, politicians have done everything they could to get on television, quite simply because they believe it is the most powerful medium for winning over voters.

The power of the tube became painfully evident at the NDP's Esquimalt-Port Renfrew campaign headquarters Thursday night when candidate Frank Mitchell was hoisted up on a table to give his victory speech.

Mitchell had got out only a few sentences when the whole crowd turned away from him. At the other end of the room there was Frank Mitchell on television.

Even Mitchell was watching.

After a few minutes someone in the crowd yelled: "Turn it off! We've got the real thing."

Given a choice, it seems, people prefer the image.

Barber Team Clips Socreds

By AL FORREST

"Sam Bawlf has been deregulated!" Victoria NDP party workers shouted Thursday night when it was announced both Charles Barber and Gordon Hanson of the NDP had been elected in the two-seat riding.

Victory for Barber was a foregone conclusion from the earliest results and the main interest centred on whether Hanson would snatch the second seat from Bawlf, provincial minister of deregulation.

Shortly after 10 p.m. Bawlf came to the NDP victory party at the Union Centre to concede defeat.

"The next time you see me I'll be fishing and sailing," he said.

Moments later Barber and Hanson arrived and there was a round of handshaking with Bawlf and Mayor Mike Young, the second defeated Social Credit candidate.

Both sides agreed the campaign had been fair and clean.

Then Hanson brought down the house by declaring his victory was due mainly to the campaign efforts of Barber, who topped the polls in winning re-election.

Barber said he was pleased that Victoria now had two NDP MLAs. It was unfortunate Social Credit had been re-elected, he said, suggesting the result might have been different if Social Credit had not carried out a redistribution before the vote, eliminating three NDP seats.

The Victoria election race was over quickly.

As soon as the polls closed, about 35 Social Credit party workers gathered at the Princess Mary to sip drinks and watch the returns on television.

At 8:45 p.m. there was a loud cheer when it was announced Saanich and the Islands MLA Hugh Curtis had overcome an early NDP lead and was comfortably in front.

Then a stunning announcement: "And in Victoria the two NDP candidates have been declared elected."

There were a few disbelieving shouts and then silence. People started to drift away.

At the same time at NDP headquarters about 200 workers were revving up for a victory party, watching the see-saw battle that had been virtually a tie in the early going.

But the party atmosphere faded and the nail-biting began as Social Credit provincially took the lead.

By 10 p.m.even the most optimistic NDP supporters said the main battle had been lost and the crowd, now more than 500 strong, began to drown its sorrows while

Brain Grafts Offer Cure for Parkinson's?

By VICTOR COHN

WASHINGTON (WP) — Scientists here have for the first time successfully grafted brain tissue from healthy to brain-damaged animals to correct a severe movement disorder.

The striking achievement — if it can be repeated in more animals, then, safely, in humans — might lead to a revolutionary new surgical treatment for Parkinson's disease and other human disorders caused by faulty brain chemistry.

An international research team led by three scientists of the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH), and including others at the University of Colorado and Sweden's famed Karolinska Institute, collaborated in the pioneering work.

Their report appears in the current issue of Science, weekly journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

The NIMH research team created brain lesions in rats, much like those found in human Parkinsonism, a disease marked by severe tremors and rigid muscles. The scientists destroyed the substantia nigra, a part of the brain stem that plays a key role in producing dopamine — a chemical involved in nerve transmission and found only in lowered amounts in Parkinsonism.

As a result of the brain damage, limited to one side of the brain to avoid killing the rats, the animals could walk in only circles.

The scientists then removed a tiny part of the brains of rat fetuses, a part containing the darkish substantia nigra. They transplanted this healthy tissue to the damaged rats — to a site near the front of the brain that controls dopamine-mediated movement.

The transplanted tissue grew and was not rejected.

Within a month, the movements in most of the 29 brain-damaged rates improved. There was little improvement in some, but improvement of 50 per cent or more in more than half the animals and 70 per cent improvements in some.

PM Sets Constitution Timetable

Times News Services

MONTREAL — Prime Minister Trudeau said Thursday that a re-elected Liberal government would move to throw off the country's constitutional "colonial link" to Britain within 30 days of the May 22 election, re-igniting a reform process that has baffled domestic governments for 52 years.

Trudeau's proposals immediately sparked stiff rebuttals from the other main federal party leaders. Opposition Leader Joe Clark accused the prime minister of more confrontation politics and New Democratic Party Leader Ed Broadbent said constitutional patriation is less important than reclaiming the economy from foreign interests.

(See other federal election stories on pages 14 and 15.)

Trudeau told 1,500 supporters his government would recall Parliament within a month to propose a joint Commons-Senate declaration calling on Britain to hand over control of the 1867 British North America Act — Canada's underlying constitutional law.

With this symbolic gesture out of the way, Trudeau would meet provincial premiers again to work on a formula for changing the law at home.

That federal-provincial conference would follow the election within 60 days and, if the leaders managed to agree, "we will uncork the champagne," Trudeau said.

But should these talks founder once more — there have been 10 unsuccessful attempts at constitutional reform in the last 52 years — he would begin a two-year hunt for a new solution.

If the two sides reached an impasse, Ottawa would ask Canadians through a referendum to decide on a future formula for changing the constitution.

Their decision would be binding on federal and provincial governments.

Trudeau made the comments during a detailed 75-minute elaboration of proposals he sketched Wednesday in Toronto to a crowd of 18,000 in Maple Leaf Gardens.

Abandoning his fighting style of the previous night, Trudeau spoke conversationally, methodically outlining points for and against constitutional reform. He spoke mainly in French, with only a smattering of English, drawing subdued, attentive response.

Clark, interviewed in Charlottetown, said Trudeau is holding "a gun to the heads of the premiers" by threatening unilateral action on patriating the Canadian constitution.

Responding to Trudeau's threat to hold a national referendum on bringing the constitution home, Clark said he is opposed to the use of a referendum, except in specific cases defined by law.

Such a case could be a referendum held in response to a vote for separation in Quebec, Clark said, adding he would favor a national referendum in that case.

The federal government allowed its general referendum bill to die on the order paper before the end of the last parliamentary session.

The Conservatives opposed the bill and suggested amendments limiting what Clark called "the immense power" the bill would give given the federal government. Clark said he would not re-introduce the referendum bill if he were elected

No Honeymoon Says Kinnaird

The Social Credit victory in the British Columbia election brought predictably mixed reaction Thursday from business and labor leaders.

Jim Kinnaird, president of the B.C. Federation of Labor, said he was disappointed that the New Democratic Party did not form the government, but he was pleased with the increased NDP seats and popular vote.

"It'll be business as usual, the way we always deal with the Socreds," said Kinnaird, who before the election virulently attacked Socred labor policy, but took a back seat during the campaign.

"I don't see any difference, and I would hope that maybe they will look over their shoulders now and just consider that there is a strong force and a strong element in the province, much stronger than there was before the election, that are not happy with the Socreds' policies towards labor."

Premier Bill Bennett regularly brought Kinnaird into the election picture during the campaign, saying he would only debate NDP leader Dave Barrett if he was joined by Kinnaird and Bob Williams, former resources minister.

Meanwhile, the Mining Association of B.C. said it was pleased with the election results but would have been happier with a stronger Social Credit showing.

Robert Matthew, association managing director, said in Vancouver that "we were really looking for a stronger free enterprise vote."

"This would have been an indication to investors that B.C. is a good place to put their funds. Mind you, there's a lot of investment money that will come out of the woodwork now anyway."

Matthew, echoing a comment by Bennett at a victory celebration in Kelowna, said he expects several major projects likely will be announced soon, both as a result of the election and the continuing strong metal prices.

Rick Higgs, manager of the B.C. and Yukon Chamber of Mines, said the policies of the Social Credit government will continue to encourage the growth of the B.C. mining industry.

"Now there will be a great many more jobs created, both in construction and mining," Higgs said. "I'm most encouraged."

Larry Ryan, secretary of the Victoria Labor Council, said concerns over high unemployment, especially in the construction industry, were responsible for the NDP's strong showing in Vancouver Island ridings.

Ryan said the NDP strength could be attributed to a depression in the construction industry, notably in southern Vancouver Island, and unacceptably-high unemployment in other industry.

SOCREDS REDUCED

voters cast a socialist ballot.

However, since Barrett has now twice suffered defeat at the hands of Bennett, inevitably speculation over the NDP leadership has again come to the fore.

Barrett himself has not issued any statement about his position with the party and there was general support for him by victorious NDP candidates last night.

But despite leading the party to its the best ever showing in the popular vote, there is some concern within the party about his ability to put the NDP into a win situation against Bennett.

The NDP holds its annual convention on the Labor Day weekend and all NDP conventions double as leadership conventions.

If Barrett should step down, the way will be open for former NDP MP Stu Leggatt to seek the party's top job.

And even if Barrett decided to try and stay on as leader one more time, some party supporters may encourage Leggatt to challenge him anyway.

Leggatt, a 46-year-old lawyer, represented the federal New Westminster riding for six years.

Last September he opted out of federal politics to run for the party in the newly created Coquitlam-Port Moody riding which he won handily in Thursday's provincial election.

During his short stay in Ottawa, he established himself as one of the party's brightest lights; a brilliant debater whose impeccable research invariably bore him out.

Vancouver Islanders voted against the tide that carried the Socreds back to Victoria.

The Island sent eight of its 10 representatives to sit in the opposition benches.

Brian Smith's resounding victory in Oak Bay was the only truly good news for the Socreds on the Island, with Deregulation Minister Sam Bawlf going down to defeat in Victoria and Lyle Kahl losing in Esquimalt-Port Renfrew.

Provincial Secretary Hugh Curtis hung on to his Saanich and the Islands seat, but not before challenger John Mika cut deeply into his 1975 margin.

Barrett said the NDP, which he has led for a decade and which he guided to victory in 1972, would be back soon. He was pleased at the share of the popular vote and added that parties, but not ideas, can be defeated.

The NDP again pulled a surprise in the dual Victoria riding. Incumbent Charles Barber topped the polls and his running mate Gordon Hanson, who ran third in 1975, knocked off Bawlf this time.

Barber and Hanson were not expected to beat both Bawlf and his running mate Mayor Mike Young.

Barber's win in 1975 was the first ever for a socialist in Victoria.

The Island north of Saanich went NDP.

Both Bennett and Barrett easily won re-election in their respective ridings; Bennett winning the Okanagan South riding he inherited from his father by 9,000 votes, and Barrett easily topping the dual Vancouver East riding he first won in a byelection in 1976 after being defeated in Coquitlam in the general election the year before.

Along with Bawlf, two other cabinet ministers fell by the wayside. Tourism Minister Elwood Veitch lost to one-time NDP municipal affairs minister Jim Lorimer and Agriculture Minister Cyril Shelford failed to hang on in Skeena against former MLA and MP Frank Howard.

Both Veitch and Shelford were late additions to the Bennett cabinet.

The loss of Shelford combined with colleague Frank Calder's defeat in Atlin means two of the longest-standing members of the B.C. legislature are gone.

Calder was first elected as a CCF MLA in 1949. Shelford first in 1952.

Predictions Defied Over the Malahat

Cowichan-Malahat NDP candidate Barbara Wallace defied predictions of a close race in the riding and sailed home with a clear majority, outstripping her closest opponent by nearly 2,000 votes.

"We asked for a clear majority and we got it. Indeed, I'm pleased," the 61-year-old grandmother said today.

Wallace wound up with 9,168 votes, compared to the Social Credit candidate Rex Hollett's 7,255 and Conservative Ken Paskin's 1,047.

Surprisingly she took both Duncan polls and the one at Shawnigan Lake which all went Socred in the 1975 election.

In addition she held the lead in Chemainus, Hollett's home poll, and topped the polls at Lake Cowichan, Youbou and Honeymoon Bay.

She made slight gains in Cobble Hill and split the Cowichan Indian vote with Hollett.

She said she was disappointed in only one result — Cowichan Bay. The two major parties split the vote. She had thought she would have done better.

Wallace had been braced for a tight battle after the government changed the boundaries in the riding knocking out Ladymsith and Cassidy, both NDP strongholds, which went into the Nanaimo riding.

"There was a feeling the government had deliberately tried to manipulate the vote by changing the electoral boundaries," she said. "But the results show the people don't like to be manipulated."

Hollett could not be reached but Paskin said he had hoped he would have captured a larger share of the votes.

"I'm more disappointed as far as Vic Stephens in concerned," he said. "The voters have chosen to go to a two-party system. I feel that will be unfortunate in the end."

Wallace's victory came as no surprise to Paskin.

The NDP have represented the riding continuously since 1952.

It's Election Night Yawns in Sleepy Hollow

By DEREK SIDENIUS
Times Staff

An army could have marched through Victoria Thursday night and few people would have known the difference.

From 6 p.m. on, the streets were practically deserted.

The city was more like Sleepy Hollow than the capital of a province fighting what was widely touted as the most important election in provincial history.

Area police forces recorded one of their quietest nights in months. Only two minor accidents were reported, one in Oak Bay, the other in the city and there were no reports of crime, fights or even barking dogs.

The reason was most people were either home watching playoff hockey between Montreal and Boston or the election results.

And business in most pubs and lounges was down sharply.

"It's been dead around here," said Paul Flinn, a waiter in the Bengal Room at the Empress Hotel.

One pub patron in a downtown establishment said: "There was really never any doubt. Deep down everyone knew the Canadiens would win. And the Socreds too."

By 9 p.m. in the Ingraham Hotel there was so little apparent interest that the television set in the bar wasn't even turned on.

A set was on in the Tally-Ho lounge but only four people sat around the bar casting furtive glances in the direction of the tube as the results droned in.

About 200 patrons in the Colony had two sets to watch, between strip shows. But few gave the election coverage much attention after the voting trends had become apparent.

When one man, sitting directly in front of one of the sets was asked the results, he replied: "Don't know. Haven't looked at the set for about 15 minutes."

Victoria's Union Club was like a tomb. While the television room was packed for the hockey game only one elderly member stayed behind to watch the election.

No, he didn't want to comment. But he was happy with the results.

His mood was in sharp contrast to that in the Legion around the corner on Courtney.

There about 15 patrons sat at their tables and gazed glassily at the television as a band played in the background and a handful of couples twirled on the dance floor.

They erupted into cheers and catcalls when the announcement came through that Charles Barber and Gordon Hansen had been elected in Victoria.

"There's goes Sam (Bawlf)," one man yelled making the sound of a plane in a dive. "Boy, that makes me feel good."

Said another patron: "We may have lost the election but we won Victoria."

Over at the Strathcona Hotel manager Walter DeHoog and one other customer were all that remained at 10 p.m. of a crowd of about 50 who had jammed into the Mahogany Room to watch the hockey and election on a massive six-foot television screen the hotel had bought earlier in the day.

As larger-than-life images were cast on the screen DeHoog said he was pleased with the outcome. Although a Socred supporter, he felt a stronger opposition will in the end create better government. But he was sorry about Bawlf's defeat.

"We're losing a good man there," he said.

He praised Barber. "He worked hard. He was well-organized. He spent time with the people.

"But Bawlf, who did a tremendous amount of work for Victoria and an excellent job . . . well, he's out."

The election, however, did manage to sustain a greater interest in at least one other drinking establishment.

At the Beaver Pub in the Empress, a crowd of mostly young people packed the tables in front of the television set.

Steve, the bartender, said he was surprised with the level of interest, up considerably from the last provincial election.

Although it was impossible to hear any sound from the set above the din in the pub, the crowd followed the results with rapt attention.

"I'm not sure they always know what's going on," said Steve. "But whenever the orange colored boxes for the NDP come on the screen, they break into applause and shouts like you wouldn't believe."

One Consolation In NDP Defeat

One major consolation for the NDP in Thursday's election defeat was its tightened armlock on Vancouver Island.

Of the 10 Island seats the NDP captured eight, leaving Provincial Secretary Hugh Curtis (Saanich-The Islands) and Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith (Oak Bay-Gordon Head) as the lonely free-enterprise twosome under the Social Credit banner.

At dissolution the NDP held five seats to the Socreds' three and Conservatives' one. Under redistribution the Island gained an additional riding, North Island, in this election.

Victoria itself provided the NDP's biggest coup, with popular incumbent Charles Barber surfing back on a high-crested roller that swept running mate Gordon Hanson along with him.

Floundering in their wake were the Socred team of Sam Bawlf and Mike Young, one of whom had been expected to split the two-seat riding with Barber.

It was another NDP success story in Esquimalt-Port Renfrew, where police sergeant Frank Mitchell avenged his narrow 1975 defeat (121 votes) by turning the tables on Socred rival Lyle Kahl with a handy 2,000-vote-plus lead.

Even in Oak Bay-Gordon Head, traditionally viewed as verboten territory for the socialists, NDPer Muriel Overgaard surprised many by running second to Smith.

And in Saanich-The Islands, aggressive campaigner John Mika gave the Socreds' Curtis a queasy moment or two in early poll results before Curtis forged ahead to take the seat for the third time — but with a drastically reduced margin.

All the Island seats north of Greater Victoria remained in NDP hands.

Colin Gabelmann, a former NDP MLA for North Vancouver-Seymour, captured the new North Island riding.

David Stupich surprised no one by retaining his Nanaimo seat with 53.8 per cent of the popular vote.

Karen Sanford held on to Comox in a close race with Socred Delbert Doll and Barbara Wallace was returned in Cowichan-Malahat, despite fears that boundary juggling had robbed the NDP of support in both constituencies.

A Socred challenge predicted from some quarters for NDP incumbent Robert Skelly in Alberni failed to materialise. He made it with more than 1,800 votes to spare.

SHELFORD WANTS RECOUNT

TERRACE (CP) — Cyril Shelford, former British Columbia agriculture minister, says he intends to call for a recount in Skeena riding where he was defeated by New Democrat Frank Howard.

"There's at least 150 votes we could throw out right now," said Shelford.

Wife Shirley and son Rick join Barrett at NDP headquarters in Vancouver Thursday night

Be Back Soon, Barrett Vows

VANCOUVER (CP) — The New Democratic Party will form the British Columbia government shortly despite its loss to Social Credit Thursday, Opposition leader Dave Barrett predicted Thursday.

"You can defeat political parties but you can't defeat ideas," he said. "We did very well tonight and are going to remain in the forefront of British Columbia politics and we will be back soon."

Barrett would not say if he plans to remain to head the party after his second straight loss to Social Credit, but he said he would think it over and would meet soon with the NDP caucus.

However, Yvonne Cocke, the party's campaign manager, said there was no doubt Barrett would remain as party leader.

"There has never been any question about Dave's leadership," she said. "We are delighted at the results tonight because we have raised our popular support substantially."

"I'm going to take a few days off and then help the NDP candidates in the federal election," said Barrett. "I want to take a look at who got elected and then sit down with the party caucus and look things over."

His mood of dejection was not shared by party members, who cheered wildly when Barrett arrived at their headquarters and then danced and hugged each other in a celebration prompted by the party's gain in the popular vote. The exitement and crush of people prompted Barrett to leave for fear someone would be hurt.

They were also solidly behind Barrett remaining as leader.

"You have to give a lot of credit to Dave Barrett for this party closing in on Social Credit," said Gordon Dowding, speaker of the legislature when Barrett was premier. "We have been trying for 30 years to get more than 40 per cent of the popular vote and we finally did it."

Norm Levi, Gary Lauk and Dennis Cocke, all elected NDP MLAs in Greater Vancouver, said the election only strengthens Barrett's hold on the party leadership.

Observers had predicted that Barrett would remain as party leader if the NDP came close in the race.

They said a large Social Credit win would mean a new leader with Cocke or Bill King, strong MLAs in the last legislature, or former MP Stu Legatt, elected Thursday, touted as possible successors.

"Don't believe that," said Cocke. "I am 100 per cent behind Dave."

The election was a marked contrast to the more bitter 1975 election fight, which put Bennett's government in office after voters were given a choice between the "socialist hoardes" of the NDP and the free-entreprise Social Credit.

That fight cost Barrett his own seat and he took six months off to take another look at the party. He returned to the legislature following a 1976 byelection and since then has been taking a more moderate approach.

Barrett said he could not understand why the election was called because there were no issues, but the campaign was thoughtful amd the calmest the NDP ever carried out.

Barrett went into the provincial fight handicapped by a deep-seated suspicion that if the NDP were to form the government it would ruin the economy. B.C was called the Chile of the North by an influential U.S. business magazine during Barrett's administration.

The increase in NDP popularity was relfected by public reaction to Barrett's leap-frog campaign across B.C. He remembered a strong and bitter anti-NDP feeling in 1975, but this time wherever he went he attracted large and responsive audiences.

Barrett called the campaign thoughtful, saying it was the calmest the party had ever carried out.

His low-key push dropped the arm-waving, joking image of 1975 that made him look fat and loveable, but which some said made him seem irresponsible.

Barrett never made any predictions about his chances for victory, but before election night was quietly confident his party could have pulled an upset.

He saw the major issue in the election as the last chance for ordinary British Columbians to have a say in their economic future and access to resources. He said the election was really between opportunity and monopoly.

Biggest Yet For Stupich

Thursday's election saw veteran NDP politician Dave Stupich sweep to victory in Nanaimo riding with the biggest majority of his long political career.

And Stupich today called the win a repudiation of a Social Credit attack on his ability to represent the voters in the riding.

Stupich demolished his lone opponent, Socred Tom Humble, capturing more than 58 per cent of the 29,074 votes cast — 16,422 compared to 11,652.

"The margin of victory shows people prefer results and don't want to be represented by someone who stands up to say what a great job he is doing," the soft-spoken, 57-year-old chartered accountant said.

Stupich said the whole tenor of the Socred campaign was to attack his record.

"They kept at it so much and so hard, I was beginning to think that maybe I wasn't doing such a good job."

The win was his fifth in nine provincial elections dating back to 1952.

He said much of the credit has to go to his organization which has the largest riding membership in the province.

The Socreds admitted early in the campaign they were fighting an uphill battle and several cabinet ministers as well as Premier Bill Bennett visited the riding to help out Humble, a 62-year-old newcomer to provincial politics.

While pleased with his personal achievement, Stupich said he was disappointed the NDP won't be forming the next government.

Safe Landing for the Parachute Man

NDP candidate Colin Gabelmann may have been wearing a parachute when he jumped into the new riding of North Island earlier this year, but he landed on his feet Thursday night as the new district's first MLA.

Gabelmann, who was defeated in North Vancouver-Seymour in 1975, won every poll but two in fighting off his main challenger, Socred candidate Gerry Furney.

Furney, mayor of Port McNeill, had a strong local presence and had been expected to give Gabelmann a tough fight.

Furney called his opponent a "tourist", but it was a label that didn't stick.

The riding, which is dominated by fishing, forestry and minining industries, voted solidly NDP, as it has in past elections.

A disappointed Furney said that "we lost the battle, but we won the war," in referring to his party's overall victory.

Gabelmann, a young, dynamic politician, set a hot pace from the start and didn't let up.

With Gabelmann's election the NDP swept the entire Island with the exception of Oak Bay-Gordon Head and Saanich-and-the-Islands.

Sanford Beats Challenge

NDP Comox candidate Karen Sanford held her seat Thursday night despite a strong challenge from the Social Credit Party.

Sanford, a school teacher, said early in the campaign that she was looking at one of the toughest fights of her political life but came through flying to take the Socred's Delbert Doll.

Doll, who had the money and a big campaign force, did well in Comox but saw Courtenay swing to Sanford.

Sanford did well in the outlying areas and increased her portion of the popular vote substantially, jumping from 40 percent in 1975 to 47 percent this time around.

Conservative Candidate Rick Kellow, meanwhile, failed to materialize as a serious challenger.

Early in the campaign Kellow, who took over from Conservative leader Vic Stephens who moved to Oak Bay, was expected to build on the PC's base. Instead he saw the popular vote slip from 15 to 10 percent.

Kellow, who has an armed forces background, was predicting solid support from the personnel in Comox and retired residents throughout the valley — but it never came.

First a Wake, Says Tothill

The third-party option seemed to be disappearing from British Columbia's polarized political scene as both the Progressive Conservatives and Liberals failed to win a seat in Thursday's provincial election.

The loss of the one Liberal seat, which had been vacant at dissolution, left that party without a member of any provincial legislature west of Ontario.

It was the first time this century that the Conservatives and Liberals had been blanked in the same election, and marked a low point in the provincial fortunes of the two parties which formed coalition governments here in the 1940s.

Jev Tothill, elected Liberal leader in February, finished a poor third in North Vancouver-Seymour as former Socred cabinet minister Jack Davis came back to win the seat he resigned after being convicted of fraud last fall.

The voters started to abandon the middle-of-the-road parties in 1975, following the example of several Liberal and Tory MLAs. Tory Hugh Curtis started the trend, but the real death knell for the two parties came when Liberal MLAs Pat McGeer, Garde Gardom and Allan Williams threw their weight behind Bennett. All four were rewarded with cabinet posts.

Following those high-profile figures, voters deserted the Tories and Liberals in droves.

The Liberals' share of the popular vote plummetted to seven per cent from 16 and elected only one member — Gordon Gibson who became leader but later resigned — instead of five.

"The first thing I'm going to do" said Tothill, 50, as he conceded defeat, "is go over to join Vic Stephens and have a wake together."

But he said he would continue his efforts to rebuild the party.

A Romp for Skelly In Alberni Riding

The NDP's Bob Skelly led Social Credit candidate Joe Van Bergen all the way in Alberni riding Thursday.

Skelley, who held the riding for his party in the last house, captured 57 per cent of the vote, even more than the 54 per cent he received in 1972 when the NDP was elected.

Redistribution in this primarily NDP area took away only a few isolated ridings on the West Coast but left the city of Port Alberni, which accounts for two-thirds of the vote in the new riding.

Defeated Socred candidate Van Bergen had no previous political experience, but did have a long history of community service behind him when he went into the campaign.

Neither the Liberals nor Conservatives ran candidates in the riding and the vote was expected to be close. In 1975 the two parties received 11.4 per cent of the vote.

Skelly said after the election people in the riding are unhappy with the services they receive considering the substantial taxes the government gets from local resources industries.

Van Bergen said he was defeated by the solid labor vote and will start working to increase the Socred popularity in the area.

City Socreds Clipped By the Barber Team

Barber told the gathering: "Twice in a row the people of Victoria sent a message to the people of B.C. that they haven't heard yet."

He lifted Hanson's hand in a joint victory salute and shouted: "If they like what one NDP MLA did for them, wait 'til they see what two can do."

Barber was elected MLA in his first try for provincial office in 1975 and has acted as municipal affairs critic for the NDP.

Hanson, who was defeated by Bawlf in 1975, is an archeologist who was employed by the B.C. Government Employees Union but resigned to run in this election.

He said he will serve as a full-time MLA like Barber.

Hanson said that, while voters had not returned the NDP to power in B.C., they had sent Bennett "some pretty heavy news" by coming close and raising the popular vote to about 47 per cent from 40 per cent.

Bawlf and Young got ovations in conceding defeat at NDP headquarters then they went to the Social Credit gathering at the Princess Mary where the discussion was more restrained.

Bawlf said he was disappointed but not surprised by his defeat and added he would like to travel and possibly get involved in international events through United Nations agencies.

Mayor Young said he probably will take today off after a month of hectic campaigning.

At NDP headquarters there was little to cheer about in the late going and NDP supporters kept up their spirits by razzing when Socreds appeared on the TV screen.

The loudest boos were saved for Premier Bill Bennett, Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm and Frank Calder, the one-time NDP MLA who switched to Social Credit and who lost Thursday night.

Federal NDP candidates Bob Cameron (Esquimalt-Saanich) and Gretchen Brewin (Victoria) made brief speeches to the gathering and passed out NDP bumper stickers.

Barber said he hoped that all 2,000 Hanson-Barber signs would disappear this weekend and be replaced by Brewin signs for the federal election.

When the candidates left, a few party workers drifted away. But most stayed behind to sing Solidarity Forever . . .

Carter Brezhnev Summit

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — President Carter and Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev will hold summit talks in Vienna June 15 to 18, the White House announced today.

The two leaders will sign the new strategic arms limitation treaty (SALT II) and discuss other issues including world problems and bilateral relations, a senior administration official said.

An administration official said that Carter hopes the summit will produce an agreement for United States and the Soviet Union to hold regular summits.

Bees Skyjack AirCan Baggage

OTTAWA (CP) — Bees skyjacked the baggage of about 40 Ottawa passengers on an Air Canada flight.

They got loose in the cargo compartment on a flight from London Ont., to Ottawa and Montreal Wednesday.

And rather than hold Montreal passengers in Ottawa until a beekeeper could be found, Air Canada flew bees and baggage to Montreal.

There, Paul Carriere, a station agent at Dorval airport, and three baggage handlers dressed in coveralls and gloves greeted them.

"It would have been preferable to smoke them out but we didn't have much time," Carriere said.

The bees, part of a shipment of 75,000, got out of one container of 2,500.

"A lot of them were stuck to the cage because they don't like to stray too far from their queen bees," Carriere said. Once caught, they were taken to a terminal warehouse.

One baggage handler was stung.

The skyjacked baggage made a beeline to Ottawa on the next beeless flight.

Constitution Date Set

prime minister, but would nevertheless work for constitutional change.

Meanwhile, Broadbent said Trudeau's plans for the BNA Act amounted to a phoney issue.

"First we must regain control of our economy — that's the real issue," Broadbent told about 2,500 delegates to a teachers convention in Toronto.

Broadbent said he feels that most Canadians want their own constitution, but "one issue transcends all — the question of resources."

"We are at a potential turning point and I want those resources, instead of being processed in the United States, Japan and Western Europe, I want these resources kept at home."

Foreign domination of the economy and leadership have been Broadbent's two main themes and his aides say he'll stress them to the end of the campaign.

TRUDEAU

The NDP wants Canadian resources "owned by Canadians, controlled by Canadians and turned into finished products by Canadians."

"I want to bring Canada back home to Canadians."

In his Montreal speech, Trudeau noted the frustration of past attempts at to find a way to plant the constitution in Canada with a universally acceptable system of overhauling it. One of the chief hurdles, he said, has been the election of a separatist government in Quebec under Premier Rene Levesque.

If the issue were not settled soon, it "may be the cause of the break up of our country," Trudeau said.

The Liberal leader spent the day preparing for the speech and aides said it will be a key element in his final campaign drive. He is expected to elaborate on the theme during the remaining 11 days of the campaign.

N.Y. Rats Attack

NEW YORK (UPI) — A woman was attacked by a pack of rats near a debris- and garbage-strewn lot near City Hall and officials were forced to close off the area to battle the rodents, authorities said today.

City health officials closed Ann Street between Nassau and Broadway and issued an urgent public appeal to the woman to seek immediate medical attention.

The woman, described as being between 30 and 35years old, jumped into a car and sped away "in a state of hysteria" Thursday night after a passerby, alerted by her screams, helped to knock the rats off her.

Carter's Gas Rationing Shot Down by Vote

Times News Services

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter said today he is "shocked and . . . embarrassed for our nation's government" by the defeat of his standby gasoline rationing plan in the House of Representatives.

And he challenged Congress to write its own plan within 90 days.

Accusing the House of "political timidity" in rejecting his rationing plan Thursday night by a 246-to-159 vote, Carter told reporters it now is up to Congress to develop a contingency plan that is "fair, equitable and balanced."

"I will give them every possible assistance," Carter said.

The president said that 95 per cent of House Republicans, compared with 40 per cent of the Democrats, voted to reject his rationing plan — already amended twice to make it more politically palatable.

Carter said the U.S. will be extremely vulnerable and himself powerless in the event of a new cutoff of imported oil supplies, without a standby emergency plan for gasoline rationing.

The House majority was "unwilling to take the responsibility — the political responsibility" to deal with a pressing national problem, Carter said. "I was shocked and I was embarrassed for our nation's government."

Arguing that the House had surrendered to "local and parochial interests," the president said: "I challenge the Congress within this next 90 days to develop their own rationing plan."

House leaders blamed the defeat, after several days of intensive White House lobbying for the plan, on confusion over which states would have received the most fuel under its provisions.

The president's original, often-amended plan for use in a national fuel emergency would have required motorists to use rationing coupons to buy gasoline under an allocation formula based on past consumption in each state.

There was no sign today that anyone in Congress is willing to take the initiative in drafting a legislative rationing plan.

The rationing proposal originated with a 1975 law that required the president to propose various standby measures for use in case of a major cutoff of foreign imports such as the 1974 Arab oil embargo.

Disregarding an impassioned appeal from House Speaker Thomas O'Neill that "This is the only plan you'll have," the Democratic-controlled House handed Carter a bitter setback.

"Many Americans felt this was a plan to implement rationing," said House Whip John Brademas (Dem. Ind.) "even though the bill would only have given Carter standby authority."

Meanwhile, in California, a garage attendant was shot in the arm and another said he was threatened with a knife as Californians continued their hunt for gasoline Thursday.

With lines still forming outside gas stations despite an allocation system brought into force Wednesday, tempers rose occasionally.

Police said gas station attendant George Boada, 30, was shot in the arm by a customer after an argument over the new "odd-even" regulation, which allowed only motorists with registration plates ending in an even number to buy gas Thursday which was an even-numbered day.

Motorists with registration plates ending in an odd number can buy gas only on odd-numbered days.

An attendant in another station, Grady Tobin, said he was threatened by a customer with a knife after he filled the man's car with gas but refused to fill a separate container.

Police said lines were shorter than they were before the new system was brought into operation, despite the fact many garages remained closed Thursday, and there were fewer arguments.

Washington officials said California should see some relief soon from the long gas station lines as a result of increased allocations.

"I hope to see an improvement in the next couple of weeks," U.S. energy department regulator David Bardin told a meeting of Californian congressmen.

He said there would be a slight increase in the supply of gas to the state as the U.S. government implements the increased allocation promised last month to stations with sale more than 10 per cent over a year ago.

Presidential assistant Stuart Eizenstadt also told the congressmen that a special White House task force has been formed to help California.

Welfare Refused, Mom Leaves Baby

When welfare officials refused her request for money on Thursday, a London, Ont., woman left her baby at the welfare office. "I just told them if they wouldn't help me look after her, then you tell the head guy that he can keep her," Janet Penney, 20, said. Abandoned by her boy-friend last week, Miss Penney went to the welfare office for money to help her move and put a deposit on an apartment in Toronto. When her first request was refused, she returned with six-month-old Amanda Star and was offered $10 for baby food. "What was I supposed to do with that when I've got to move and buy food and find a place to live?" she said.

Las Vegas Mayor Bill Briare says he wants to rewrite the law in a way that may force actress Marilyn Chambers to stage a cover-up. Briare says he'll propose an ordinance requiring that the pubic area be covered during performances in any establishment with a city liquor or gaming licence. "A convention city like Las Vegas just does not need this sort of image."

CHAMBERS

. . . not Vegas image?

It was right out of an old Abbott and Costello movie. The limousine rolled up to the White House, the trumpets blared, the guest stepped out — and walked in the wrong door. Twenty-five yards away, there stood President Carter, waiting to meet visiting Panamanian President Aristides Royo. While protocol officers chased the wandering guest, Carter strolled into the Rose Garden. Royo was finally corralled and the meeting got under way just as if nothing had gone amiss.

The car owned by Chicago mass murder suspect John Gacy Jr., a '79 Oldsmobile which may have been used to carry at least one body to be dumped into the Des Plaines River, has attracted bids of up to $50,000 from souvenir hunters, says one of Gacy's lawyers. The 1979 Oldsmobile will be auctioned to raise money for his defence.

Sondra Gotlieb was named today as the 1979 winner of the Leacock award for humor for her biographical book True Confections, the story of a Jewish girl growing up in Winnipeg. An effervescent Ottawa social figure, Mrs. Gotlieb has specialized in previous publications in food — The Gourmet's Canada and Cross-Country Cooking.

Popes and presidents usually get what they want in the way of creature comforts, but Pope John Paul II probably is the first pontiff ever to request a swimming pool. Vatican sources say initial work on a 40-by-82-foot pool at the Castel Gandolfo — the pope's summer residence — is complete and workmen are racing to finish the job by early June so John Paul II can do a few laps after his visit to Poland. At 59, he's the most physically active pontiff in modern times, but since his election, he's only been able to take an occasional walk in the garden. For this pope, that just doesn't call for enough muscle.

Bombs Rattle Lesotho

MASERU, Lesotho (AP) — The Lesotho government Thursday blamed exiled politicians for bomb blasts which shook the impoverished mountain kingdom Wedneaday night.

The explosions severely damaged the Central Post Office, forcing suspension of service until May 14, and damaged Lesotho's main electric supply installations on the South African border. No one was injured.

Gerard Ramoreboli, law and justice minister, blamed the Basutoland Congress party led by the exiled Ntsu Mokhehle of setting the blasts, although police still are investigating.

Lebanon Calls UN

UNITED NATIONS, (Reuter) — Lebanon has formally requested an urgent meeting of the UN Security Council on the situation in southern Lebanon, Lebanese Ambassador Ghassan Tueni said Thursday.

Tueni told a news conference he was making the announcement because of widespread confusion over whether two letters he previously circulated on Israli incursions into the area constituted a formal request for such a meeting.

"The fact that they were couched in terms that were not conventional or did not correspond to the literary jargon of the UN is only probably a sign of . . . my desire not to conform with this jargon," he said.

Arabs Want Egypt to Pay

WASHINGTON (WP) — Kuwait has intensified the Arab economic campaign against the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty by demanding that Egypt return about $1 billion of Kuwaiti deposits in Egyptian banks, U.S. sources reported Thursday.

This move and other signs that Arab nations are intent on punishing Egyptian President Anwar Sadat more severely than Cairo and Washington had expected emerged as some senior Carter administration officials were reportedly discussing an urgent new economic aid program for Egypt.

The administration is not formally considering proposals to increase U.S. aid to Egypt now, sources said, but there is official discussion of new efforts by Washington to press West Germany, Japan and other developed nations into providing joint economic help for Sadat that could raise the amount of U.S. funds going to Egypt.

Support for an expanded Egyptian aid program, which might be channeled through a regional development bank, reportedly comes from the Commerce Department and the office of President Carter's special representative on trade, Robert S. Strauss, who has just been named special negotiator for the Middle East.

A decision by Arab nations last month to halt new economic aid to Egypt appears to imperil immediately a $1.4 billion telecommunications project three U.S. companies have proposed to build.

No celebrations

Perhaps the oddest thing about yesterday's provincial election is that after it was all over no one had anything to celebrate. While individual candidates could celebrate their victories, the results didn't give any of the parties much to cheer about.

The NDP can be pleased that it increased its representation in the House by eight MLAs and increased its share of the popular vote to a record high for the party (some 46 per cent). It still didn't win, however, and there's nothing to cheer about in losing.

As for the Social Credit government, the most it had to celebrate was survival. Premier Bill Bennett and his cohorts managed to maintain their position as the ruling party, but only by the skin of their teeth, their majority in the House reduced to one-third of what it was before the election. Even the most diehard Socred couldn't be deluded into calling it an overwhelming triumph for the Socred policies of the past 41 months.

For the Liberals and Conservatives, the situation was even worse. The voters trounced both parties so ferociously that it seems certain to be several years before either even tries to make a comeback on the provincial scene. For the Liberals, the results spelled their demise as a provincial party in western Canada — the party no longer holds a seat in any provincial legislature west of Ontario.

But if the outcome was uniformly bad for all four parties, it may prove to be a boon for the voter. One of the weaknesses of B.C. politics for the past decade has been the wild swings between huge majorities for one party and huge majorities for the other. A close legislature with a strong opposition should force the government to be more accountable and less inclined to flaunt its large majority in the opposition's face and press on like a runaway steam roller.

It will, for example, doubtless force the House itself to become more civilized and to begin to work on the basis of gentlemen's agreements that have long been forgotten in B.C. If the government isn't willing to co-operate in these matters, it could find itself defeated the first time a contingent of the cabinet larger than four is forced to take off to Ottawa for a federal-provincial conference.

The House should also be improved by the addition of some of the new members elected. Lawyers Brian Smith and Peter Hyndman for the Socreds, and returning politicians Stu Leggatt and Colin Gabelmann for the NDP are examples of men who promise to add dignity, wit and intelligent debate to the forum that in the past has too often been nicknamed "The Zoo." Doubtless some of the new MLAs from up-country, still unknown to the Island, also have the potential to be first-rate representatives.

In matters of policy, Bennett should have received a clear message: The voters of B.C. believe it is important that the economy be kept moving and that business be encouraged, but they want that attitude tempered with humanityand consideration for the less fortunate. In difficult economic times, difficult decisions may still have to be made, but they must be made in a way that hurts the ordinary people as little as possible.

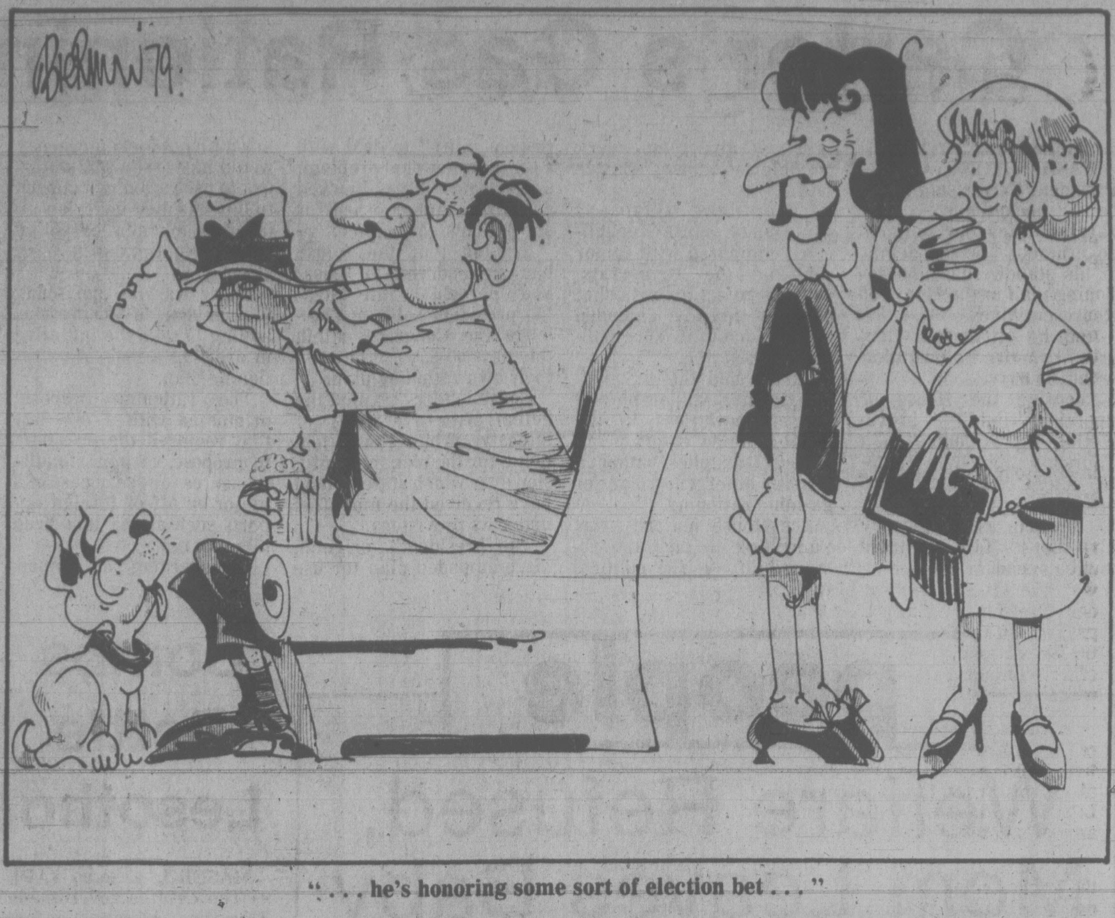
Bennett's immediate comments that his first job will be to try to make peace with organized labor show that he seems to have received the message loud and clear.

While some cynics were suggesting during the campaign that the premier was just waiting until after the election to bring on some new tax hikes for the people, it's just as easy to argue the other way. Now that the election is over, Bennett can also feel free to take moves that may be unpopular with some of the more right-wing members of his party and caucus without fearing that they will cause party dissension during an election campaign.

The premier's first big job now is cabinet building. He has three spots to fill, but he should certainly take the opportunity for a good over-all shake-up where it is needed. Those ministers who did not prove themselves competent during the past 41 months need not be reappointed. Some of the best new people should be brought in immediately.

An appointment that is of great concern to Victorians is the question of who is to take Sam Bawlf's place as the minister responsible for the provincial capital commission. If a word may be whispered in the premier's ear, Brian Smith would be excellent for the job.

A strong cabinet will be the first tangible indication that the citizens of B.C. may have something to celebrate as a result of the message they sent to their government.



". . . he's honoring some sort of election bet . . ."

Trudeau: the magic is gone

TORONTO — Probably the most effective piece of political propaganda of this century was the First World War recruiting poster of Lord Kitchener of Khartoum, eyes glaring, moustache bristling, telling the county plough boys and the London barrow boys, "Your Country Needs You".

Wednesday night, before a huge crowd of 20,000 in Maple Leaf Gardens, and against the backdrop of the largest maple leaf flag in the country (20 feet by 40 feet, compared to the eight-by-16-foot standards that fly above Parliament's Peace Tower), Pierre Trudeau delivered the same message, but with one vital word change in it. Trudeau message was: "Your Country Needs Me."

And his message fell flat.

No cheers or applause

For one incredible stretch of close to 10 minutes during his 30-minute speech, Trudeau was interrupted by neither applause nor cheers. To bring the crowd back to life, Trudeau had to interrupt his appeal for a united Canada, and for himself, by a spell of his now familiar "Clark bashing." To wind himself up to a peroration, Trudeau had to use the announcement he'd originally planned to make today in Montreal — that if necessary he would patriate the constitution unilaterally against the wishes of the provinces, provided Canadians supported him in a national referendum.

"He hasn't got the moves any more," a senior and wise reporter remarked to me at the close of Trudeau's speech, with more than a trace of sadness in his voice. Watching Trudeau perform in this hockey arena, it was impossible not to see him as a Bobby Orr or a Gordie Howe trying to make it again in the National Hockey League, who'd hung on too long.

The moves still were there all right. The gigantic flag. The speech delivered without notes. The fawn, corduroy suit that emphasized his perennial youthfulness. The solitary entrance into the packed arena floor, walking between a double line of barricades, two plainclothes RCMP officers walking in front, but well ahead, and a third well behind him. The solitary champion parading before his people.

The crowd was his to command. For three hours they had stomped and clapped and waved banners to the music of rock bands and country bands and the mellow melodies of Sylvia Tyson. All were Liberals, of course. They had packed the hall — a triumph of organization this — and so had transformed a political gamble into a political spectacular.

Yet there was no electricity. No resonance. The moves had become mechanical, instead of magical. At times — "Our hopes for the future are based on reality", "I see a Canada in which government and labor and management will work in harmony" — Trudeau, almost unbelievably so, sounded more like a Chamber of Commerce luncheon speaker than does Joe Clark, even on one of his average days.

There were moments when the old magic glowed. He got in a deft dig at Clark for constantly issuing promises and then recalling them when they proved unpopular. "If Mr. Clark were selling automobiles, he wouldn't have a single one left." He got perhaps his strongest applause, from the party's phalanx of ethnic supporters, when he promised a Bill of Rights "with equality for all regardless of race or color or creed."

Unsure of himself

Yet the beads of sweat on the brow of one of the coolest men in politics, told the story. So did a curious edginess to Trudeau's entry into the arena. Usually, he plunges happily into crowds. This time, flanked by the barricades, he walked in rapidly, brushing hands rather than grasping them.

On the platform and off it, Trudeau seemed unsure of himself, unsure that is of his reception, whether Canadians still believe they need him.

So this was the real sadness to the occasion. Not that Trudeau has lost some of his moves, which after an 11-year grind was bound to happen, but that he's lost touch with his public. And knows it. All the balloons and banners and bands and buses of supporters couldn't put Trudeau and his audience back together again.

His one chance left is to convince Canadians that even if they don't need him, they need Clark even less.

Referendums: usually a yes

WASHINGTON — Canadians worried about the impending Quebec unity referendum won't find much solace in international trends. A recent study published here shows that referendums in democratic nations almost always pass.

Switzerland and Australia, where public votes on important issues are an integral part of the political process, stand out as exceptions. Elsewhere, referendums have a staggering success rate.

Leaving these two nations out, of the 170 referendums placed before citizens in non-communist nations since the late 18th century, nearly 90 per cent were passed.

The questions ranged in significance from important constitutional changes to whether motorists should drive on the right-hand side of the road. Only twice in modern history did the governments which put the questions before the people ignore or bypass the popular decision.

De Gaulle lost one

Rarely did a negative vote disturb the political scene. The lone exception here was Charles de Gaulle, who resigned in 1969 when the French turned down a proposal he authored.

These and other findings are contained in a book entitled Referendums: A Comparative Study of Practice and Theory, published by the Washington-based American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research.

The book, edited by political scientists David Butler and Austin Ranney, concludes that referendums are becoming more popular with governments, if for no other reason than that they allow leaders to sidestep sensitive issues.

Though the editors don't take a strong stand one way or the other, they seem to lean toward the view that referendums may not be a healthy manifestation.

"Referendums," they say, "disturb politicians — and us — because they tend to force the decision-makers, the voters, to choose between only two alternatives: They must either approve or reject the measure referred . . .

"Referendums by their very nature set up confrontations rather than encourage compromises. They divide the populace into victors and vanquished.

"They force decisions often before the discussion process has had a chance to work itself out fully. Surely this is a great deficiency."

Ranney and Butler admit that the great advantage of referendums is that the decisions they produce have great legitimacy with the public.

Whatever the wisdom of mass decision-making, most democracies have experimented with this process at one time or another.

Indeed, a third of all UN members have gone to the people on at least one occasion for guidance.

Of all the nations with an uninterrupted democratic history, in fact, only the U.S. and the Netherlands have never had a nationwide referendum. (The U.S. indulges in them extensively on the state level.)

. . . need straightforward question

The editors confirm the popular belief, often heard in Quebec, that the wording of the question is a big factor. But deviousness in the wording has rarely been successful.

"People know what is at stake, and a loaded question may cause resentment and actually be counterproductive," they say.

A good example of this last point is de Gaulle's 1969 referendum in which he sought to boost his ebbing political fortunes by diluting the power of the senate and the local assemblies — both bastions of anti-Gaullism.

This intention was disguised in the wording of the question, asking the country to give him the necessary support to "renovate" the state.

Fifty-three per cent of the voters saw through the scheme and rejected the proposal. De Gaulle resigned.

Governments don't always call referendums in good faith. In Sweden in 1955, authorities strongly favored a switch from driving on the left-hand side of the road to driving on the right-hand side.

But it proved to be political dynamite, so the government ordered a referendum. An overwhelming majority of Swedes voted no. However, 12 years later, the government ordered the switch anyway without public approval.

It should be admitted that the coming Quebec referendum on sovereignty-association has no real historical parallel. The closest comparison would be the 1905 vote by Norwegians to dissolve that country's union with Sweden. Norwegian politicians kicked off a wave of nationalist feeling by unilaterally declaring that the Swedish king had ceased to reign and that the 90-year-bond was null and void.

Minorities suffer

The Swedes said they would accept separation on certain conditions, notably that Norwegians voted on it.

The vote was nearly unanimous (368,000 for and 184 against) and within a few months, a second referendum instituted a Norwegian monarchial government.

The editors of the survey outline the key arguments for and against the holding of referendums. On the positive side:

☐ They produce the most reliable expression of public will in controversial matters (i.e. the 1975 vote in Great Britain on participation in the Common Market.)

☐ They make government seem less remote, reduce the power of special interests in decision-making, and are a good antidote to apathy and alienation.

On the negative side:

☐ They can theoretically weaken the power of elected officials.

☐ The public is often not "wise" enough to deal with a complex issue.

☐ A referendum result can be deceptive. (A close vote, for example, does not measure depth of feeling.)

☐ A referendum is a forced decision, rather than a consensus, and it damages the rights of minorities.

Cystic fibrosis

Your newspaper recently reported on a new approach to the treatment of pseudmonas infections in cystic fibrosis.

This approach has been developed by Dr. Bill Costerton, professor, division of cellular and microbial biology, University of Calgary, who has been receiving financial support from the Canadian Cystic Fibrosis Foundation for the past few years. His work deals with the description of the characteristics of various pseudomonas strains which are present in the lungs of patients with cystic fibrosis. He has published extensively on this subject, and has attracted international interest.

Pseudomonas bacteria are adherent to cells lining the respiratory tract and are relatively inaccessible to antibiotics because of their thick mucous coat.

His recent studies deal with the characterization of the mucus and with finding means of inhibiting its production. His discovery of a "blocking agent" in test tube experiments may be of great potential significance. If it can be shown to be effective in animals, and eventually humans, the findings of Dr. Costerton would constitute a major breakthrough in the treatment of cystic fibrosis. Chronic pulmonary infections with pseudomonas constitute a significant problem in cystic fibrosis, and may contribute to the deterioration of pulmonary function with time.

As Dr. Costerton said, it will be a long time before the biochemistry and animal work is completed, and before production and approval of a safe and effective clinical product to prevent the formation of mucus and destroy pseudomonas organisms.

Although the current status of Dr. Costerton's research is good news, it is still at a very early stage and must be treated with caution pending completion and publication of this work.

Dr. Costerton's project is one of 27 currently funded by the Canadian Cystic Fibrosis Foundation. This year we will be spending $1¼ million on clinical and basic research — all aimed at finding a cure or control for this inherited disorder which affects the lungs and digestive system. Approximately one in every 1,800 children born in Canada has cystic fibrosis. — Mrs. Amy M. Downs, Executive Director, Canadian Cystic Fibrosis Foundation.

CRASS awards

I would like to suggest that some kind of trophy or shield be established in recognition of those merchants whose window displays add color, character and a dash of panache to the downtown area of British Columbia's capital city. Such an award might be called the "City Retailers Artistic Storefront Shield" or "CRASS" for short.

My personal choice for this year's winner would be Shopper's Drug Mart at the corner of Douglas Street and Yates Street, for the way they illuminate this major downtown intersection to such stunning effect . . . seeming to cram more posters, special offers, price signs, toilet rolls, deodorant bottles and slogans to the square inch of window than there actually are square inches of window. But, upon reflection, this company has maintained such consistent display standards through the years that nothing short of a perpetual trophy seems appropriate.

A permanent award for Shopper's Drug Mart would leave the 1979 Annual Trophy clearly in the hands of another window display from Douglas Street and Yates Street — the Metropolitan Store, whose recent bold and imaginative use of brown paper sheeting to shroud the entire store front is reminiscent of wartime blackouts and temporary mortuaries — a most evocative effort and a masterpiece in its simplicity.

Come on Victorians, this is election year — why not cast your vote for winner of the CRASS window display award for 1979? — John Bryant, 1221-440 Simcoe Street.

Let Rene order

Do we really want as prime minister, a man who is not intimidated by wine waiters?

It may seem like a strange question, but it arises from a column written by Anthony Westell (of the Toronto Star) who seems to answer: "Yes." The man (we presume) who is not intimidated by wine waiters has been our prime minister since 1968. We remember that his campaign message then was One Canada, when no one else had any doubt of the fact. However, with the help of bannister railings, roses, columnists, Caesar haircuts and Canadian sheep, he became overseer of two unhappy Canadas.

You say, Mr. Westell, that Mr. Clark has never served in a government, or worked in a business — that he has no profession.

At 33 (Mr. Clark's age at the time of the ominous wine waiter encounter), what was The One up to? Maybe he was a lawyer (thousands are you know) — no one ever tells us whether his grades were As, Bs or Cs — anyway it matters little since, not having ever practised the craft, he helped nor hindered no one. A political philospher you say — what do you do with one of those in a government or a business?

A great intellect? What has happened in Canada in the past 11 years to cause us to believe that the prime minister is so blessed? Why should we hope for better in the next four or five years? At 59, mental growth seldom speeds up.

At 39, Mr. Clark is (as you say) honest and decent and the holder of a useful political science master's degree. He enjoys the rewards of an enriching family life and is more graceful and attractive than Abraham Lincoln. One is encouraged to believe that we will have an honorable, co-operative effective prime minister.

About what Rene Levesque would do to Joe Clark — they could sit at table together and end the estrangement. Rene could order the wine! — K. Chatterton, 2180 Beach Drive, Victoria.

Campaign hoopla that insults our intelligence

By ALLAN FOTHERINGHAM

TORONTO — The more this campaign goes on, the more frustrated the poor voter must be.

It isn't enough that the Canadian electorate is faced with a choice between a prime minister it has grown tired of and a challenger who clearly causes widespread nervousness.

Given all that, the irritated voter who doesn't think much of either alternative is continually assaulted with insults to his intelligence and common sense.

The extravaganza in Maple Leaf Gardens Wednesday night, something out of hokum crossed with blarney, was the latest example of political contempt for a voting public that has progressed several light-years beyond the bread and circus era of election entertainment passing as enlightenment.

Is there anyone left in the land who really thinks packing a hockey rink with 15,000 warm bodies — composed of youthful rock fans and committed Liberal workers — actually changes anyone's vote?

Is there any jaded voter, viewing the orchestrated hokum on TV, who does not realize in May, 1979, that it was all staged so the voter would be impressed, dazzled, converted and evangelized by the miraculous enthusiasm transmitted via the tube?

It's a measure, surely, of the bankrupt ideas of a regime in power 11 years that it attempts to take us back to the thump-and-scream period of William Jennings Bryan, John Diefenbaker, and an earlier, younger Pierre Trudeau, who at least on those occasions a decade ago could simulate the enthusiasm necessary to make the media events plausible.

Wednesday night, in the sweltering old hockey rink built by a Connie Smythe who decreed that if you can't beat 'em in the alley you can't beat 'em on the ice, the Liberals tried a pitch as tired and outdated as the discredited Smythe creed.

First of all, we fill the upper reaches with free tickets for the bubble-gummers eager to have their hearing impaired by a belter, Lisa Del Bello, by a rocking Sylvia Tyson, by the Good Brothers, by the Downchild Band. Then, every Liberal constituency in the Toronto Metro area is given a quota of seats to fill, and half the chartered buses in southern Ontario roll in with loyal campaign workers who are, essentially, rent-free backdrop for the TV cameras that are supposed to be fooled by the nonsense.

It is a hall hired as a giant TV set: chartered noise to fill the tape recorders and background enthusiasm for the same speech the PM has been giving for weeks.

The insult to the intellect of the electorate does not stop with the Liberals. Joe Clark, a man who every day moves closer to the prime minister's chair, persists in volunteering nonsense that defies logical analysis.

Trudeau and friends in Maple Leaf Gardens . . . 'hokum crossed with blarney'

The country, divided by language and culture, has made painful but gradual progress with Trudeau's bilingual legislation. Why then would Clark, who already has the red-neck vote, promise to tinker with it over the harmless issue of bilingual labels on food-stuffs? As even the stoutly anglophone Montreal Gazette pointed out in some fury, has it ever occurred to Clark the millions of unilingual Quebecers who had to put up for generations with their goods labelled in English?

Why would Clark, so close to victory, stoop to such transparent vote buying as promising the Yukon, with 21,000 residents, provincial status? Does anyone take that seriously? Why would Clark, who surely has all the anti-Quebec votes extent, venture into such foggy ground as declaring that Quebec has no right to vote itself out of Canada and then pretend that it wouldn't take arms to enforce such a stand?

The Americans, a century ago, took the same stand and, by force of arms, held their union together. Why Clark would toy with one principle and then pretend that it doesn't require the second is so baffling as to make a voter cry out in frustration.

The irrationality of this campaign covers both sides. Trudeau, musing aloud as if contemplating angels on a pinhead, toys with the idea of how he might keep power even if defeated. Clark talks about saving the nation's debt by going further into debt.

Trudeau, appearing to grow increasingly desperate as the mood for a change drifts in Clark's direction, took the sting out of his big Montreal speech planned for Thursday by giving away the thrust Wednesday night: he will try just once more with the premiers before bringing the constitution home from London on his own and going to the people for approval.

It was almost a throwaway line in a sweating temple of amplified speakers and rented celebrities. In a final fade-away for the cameras, he was surrounded by mascared singers and kung fu warriors. It was a pageant more suitable to an operetta than an election.

So old-fashioned. So futile.

The British have a shorter, better way

By NORMAN WEBSTER
The Globe and Mail

LONDON—Just when you despair of the British, they go and do something rather important rather well — such as an election. The exercise which wound up last Thursday in the polling-booths was a model of good sense and fair procecure.

Not everyone here agrees with me. There have been complaints that the campaign was too long, too boring, manipulated for television, divorced from the real issues and so on. Maybe so; but for someone accustomed to North American elections, it was refreshing.

It certainly wasn't too long for a Canadian accustomed to eight-week marathons of political exhaustion. There were five weeks between the day the government fell and polling day here. But actual campaigning lasted only 3½ weeks. Margaret Thatcher spent just over a fortnight on the road.

Nevertheless, the issues got a good workout. Party manifestos set out programs in some detail, and the leaders were available regularly for questioning at press conferences in London. The British just wouldn't stand for something like the sequestration of Joe Clark, or Pierre Trudeau's cynical promise-a-day (but no questions, please) campaign of 1974.

There was a refreshing absence of the personal nastiness that seems central to so many U.S. campaigns. This may have been due to Labor's worry about a backlash by women voters against putdowns of Mrs. Thatcher, but whatever the reason, the politicians generally tried to carve up their opponents' policies rather than their reputations.

It was nice, too, to notice the absence of big spending. The voters got the message without a lot of expensive razzmatazz, although there was some notable humor.

My favorite was the Tory commercial showing a youth trying to find the queue for a film. He keeps bumping into queues, but they turn out to be for unemployment benefits, medical operations, council houses or emigration. Finally he finds the lineup he has been looking for, turns to his girlfriend in disgust and says, "I know what I don't want to see — the Labor party in power."

"The Labor party in power?" she says brightly. "Wasn't that the Marx Brothers?"

Television, of course, played a major role in this campaign, and generally a responsible one. Naturally the politicians did their best to provide pictures that would get on the evening news — Mrs. Thatcher lifting a calf right off its feet in a bear-hug. James Callaghan cutting the birthday cake of a toothsome young thing — but over-all, they did not succeed in manipulating the medium.

There were no face-to-face debates because Mrs. Thatcher refused to join in, but there were interviews with the major party leaders, and some tough sessions when they had to answer questions put by voters around the country.

Liberal leader David Steel grumbled that the Conservatives were being marketed like cat food — "disgusting stuff" — and the Guardian complained that this had been "Britain's most packaged and PR-dominated election." Believe me, chaps, it was kids stuff compared to what the Queen's Park Tories lay on.

The only really disagreeable feature of the the campaign was something I wrote about earlier — namely, the propaganda war waged by partisan tabloid newspapers.

(New item: "A return to real freedom from Labor's downward path to Marxism was offered last night by Mrs. Margaret Thatcher." From a Daily Express front page.)

Two can play this game, of course, and the Labor-supported Daily Mirror jumped in on the other side, but over-all the circulation of flagrant Tory tabloids — 8,280,000 — swamped the Mirror's 3,640,000.

Its inherent nastiness apart, this kind of journalism provokes an intemperate response. Prominent Labor spokesmen have called in the past for licencing of newspapers by a state body which would monitor their content to ensure it met "standards of responsibility and accountability."

The threat behind those silken words is clear and frightening. But campaigns such as the one just past can only strengthen demands to curb freedom of the press.

It's a plot

TORONTO STAR

You could have fooled us, but here it is direct from the Soviet Union: The environmentalist campaign against nuclear power is really a plot of the oil companies.

According to Anatoly Aleksandrov, president of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, the "fuel monopolies" are afraid of losing their oil profits. The recent nuclear accident at Harrisburg had some "minor unpleasant consequences," he admits. But the Soviet Scientist claims these were depicted by the press "in an extremely exaggerated manner" at the behest of oil companies who want to prevent a switch to nuclear power.

We've accused the oil industry of many things in our day. But we hadn't realized that the oil industry was the power behind the throne at Energy Probe. We suspect the oil industry didn't know that either. But now that we do . . .

The old insides story

russell baker

NEW YORK — In Middleton, Conn., Wesleyan University scientists have unwrapped a mummy to extract four cigar-shaped objects which X-rays had located in the abdominal cavity. The deceased is thought to be from 2,500 to 3,000 years old and to have died as a teenager.

The papers say he has been at Wesleyan for about 100 years but still hasn't earned a degree. The usual troubles with the physics requirement, no doubt. Last year in the course of a medical check-up the four strange objects — "resembling cigars," according to The New York Times — were located by X-ray in his digestive tract.

What are these mysterious objects? To answer the question, archeologists intend to unravel them and may already have done so by this time; which would be a pity since it is so much more entertaining to speculate about this sort of mystery than to have its solution.

It is possible, for instance, that the cigar-shaped objects may be nothing more interesting than cigars. This would disappoint archeologists who would prefer them to be scrolls containing writings about ancient Egyptian beliefs about death.

Why they should prefer more information on this subject is a mystery in itself. Ancient Egyptian beliefs about death are already better understood, even by millions of laymen, than modern Egyptian beliefs about the Palestinian problem.

The discovery that mummies place a curse on anybody who violates their tombs was made 40 years ago by students of Boris Karloff. Having it reaffirmed now would not be half so interesting as discovering that Egyptian embalmers smoked Havana cigars while they worked and were sometimes careless about disposing of them.

Another possibility is that the objects may be towels thoughtlessly left in the abdomen while the young man was having his appendix removed. Surgery was not unknown in ancient Egypt, but malpractice lawyers were.

Another theory rests on the fact that we are dealing with a teenage mummy. If afflicted with the historic adolescent appetite for junk food, he may well have gorged himself to death on Babylonian fried camel humps, which the embalmers would have been understandably squeamish about touching while doing their work.

This theory received little credence in the scientific community, however, partly because it is almost impossible to fry camel humps in cigar configurations and partly because even the most astonishing junk foods can be fully digested after 200 years in the abdominal cavity.

The more provocative speculation suggests that the mysterious objects may not be 2,500 years old, but of more recent vintage. One scientist suspects they may be the famous 18½-minute Nixon tape. Gen. Alexander Haig, the chief Nixon White House aide at the time of the disappearance, blamed it on "a sinister force."

A 2,500-year-old mummy would qualify under General Haig's definition, although why it chose to go to the White House and ingest 18½ minutes of recording tape is a question not easily answered.

Students who have eaten university food say that 18½ minutes of recording tape would taste like a feast to anyone who had been restricted to the campus cafeteria for 100 years, but there is no evidence that this particular mummy had ever dined at Wesleyan, or any place else for that matter, at least since his putatively final meal of Babylonian camel humps.

There are far more reasonable explanations of what the objects might be. Fanciers of assassination conspiracy theories will watch closely to make sure the CIA or the FBI does not squirrel out the secret omnibus assassination plan in dead of night and replace it with something as misleading as cigars or scrolls explaining Egyptian beliefs about death.

Some speculate that since the mummy has been at Wesleyan for about 100 years, it may even contain the secret plans for the assassination of Abraham Lincoln and the "framing" of John Wilkes Booth, that this was cannily tucked away in the mummy's innards by the Lincoln assassination conspirators to prevent investigators from discovering their links with the CIA.

The difficulty with this theory is that the CIA did not exist at the time of the Lincoln assassination, at least openly. No one can be sure, of course, that it was not already operating secretly, perhaps as an arm of the Treasury Department, which did exist.

My own theory is less exciting. My guess is that the "scrolls" will prove to be nothing more exciting than the "crib" for the final Latin examination given at Wesleyan in the year 1879.

If I am correct, a Wesleyan student gave a translation of Olim Et Haec Meminisse Iuvabit so flawless that the college Latin Department ordered a full-scale investigation. Where was a student to hide the deadly evidence?

The word "deadly" must have triggered his inspiration. What had just arrived at Wesleyan that was dead? Of course. With the ingenuity natural to students, the rest must have been easy.

TOO OLD and cramped to keep pace with the electronic age, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce building at Douglas and Bay was being vacated today. Business is transferring to the bank's Quadra and Hillside branch. Fate of the old structure, erected in 1910 as the North Victoria branch of the commerce, isn't known by bank employees but city is looking into feasibility of moving it and preserving it as a heritage building. Health Care Warning

VANCOUVER (CP) — The quality of health care in British Columbia will drop if doctors are not paid enough, Alex Mandeville, newly-elected president of the B.C. Medical Association, said Thursday.

Mandeville said he expects the province's 4,500 doctors to reject a tentative contract with the provincial government giving them a 17.4-per-cent fee increase over a two-year period.

Mandeville, who takes over as BCMA president next year, said that a 10.2-per-cent increase annually could maintain doctors' incomes at the present rate of inflation.

He said that if doctors are not paid enough they will have to take on more patients and this would mean that care would suffer.

The association's board of directors has recommended that doctors accept the new fee schedule.

Mandeville said that already doctors have been maintaining their incomes by inceasing volume, and there has to be a point where they can no longer increase their case loads without downgrading medical care.

Victoria Firemen Vote Acceptance

Victoria firemen have voted to accept a one-year agreement with the city.

Union president Rich Brideson said the firefighters voted on the agreement Wednesday night but didn't want to release the results until after the provincial election.

The agreement is tied to one yet to be reached by firemen in Vancouver as the Victoria firemen's wages will remain $2 below their mainland counterparts. An interim five-per-cent increase, retroactive to Jan. 1, takes effect until there is a settlement in Vancouver.

The firemen had been seeking a two-year contract with a two-per-cent increase in each year plus a cost of living allowance clause which would give them a percentage increase equal to the rise in the cost of living.

But Brideson said the firemen agreed to scrap the COLA clause if they got a one-year agreement expiring Dec. 31.

Brideson said the firemen were particularly happy not to have to go through the expensive arbitration process.

The firefighters have gone to arbitration about 28 times in the last 30 years, he said.

Millionaire Plays $200,000 Game

VANCOUVER (UPC) — A Vancouver millionaire landowner was so tired of trying to book a racquetball court at the downtown YMCA, he gave them $200,000 to build two new courts — as long as one of them is reserved for him every day at 4 p.m.

"It seemed like a pretty fair deal to me," said Nelson Skalbania, 40. "They needed the courts and I wanted to be sure I could use one whenever I'm in town."

YMCA spokesman Chuck Wright said, "Obviously we're delighted with his gift."

Horror Stories by Amin Survivor

KAMPALA (AP) — One of the survivors of a death prison operated by deposed Ugandan distator Idi Amin said Thursday he existed three months on two meals a week and little water in a room so small that prisoners had to take turns lying down to sleep.

Rev. George Lukwiya, an Anglican priest from Kampala, said that during one period 34 prisoners died in a three-by-four-metre room crammed with 60 persons and that their decaying bodies were left inside for one week.

Lukwiya described conditions in the hated State Research Bureau, Amin's murder and spy agency, in an interview. He said he was released on April 5.

There was no independent confirmation of his story.

Lukwiya said he lost feeling in his legs during his imprisonment and has not regained it, although he can walk. He said he lost 50 pounds but that having an original 200-pound bulk to draw from enabled him to survive.

Lukwiya said he was seized by two armed and uniformed men in Kampala Jan. 11, taken to the research bureau, stripped to his underwear and put in a top-floor cell. He said he still does not know why he was arrested.

"Some were sitting while others slept," he said. "When you got tired, you asked someone sleeping to sit up so you could sleep.

"They were supposed to give you two meals a week. But sometimes we didn't get our food. The guards would come in drunk and laugh and say to us, 'even the money they gave me for your food, I drank it up.'

"There was water in the building but sometimes you wouldn't get any for a week. I went 16 days without food.

"People died all the time from starvation and thirst. In the morning you would wake up to find people dead.

"We piled them in a corner and tried to cover them but the smell was horrible.

"The sergeant major noticed the smell and made arrangements for the prisoners to take out the bodies. We were not allowed to carry the bodies, but had to drag them by their feet from the top floor to the ground.

"The flesh and hair would remain on the floor. The flies were everywhere. The flesh would remain on our hands. We could not wipe it off because there was no water, and we had to eat with our hands like that.

"In the middle of the night they would call the prisoners to come and 'pack up your things.' They meant to carry out the dead bodies.

"The women were very badly treated. They were in a separate cell, but the guards would leave the door open so that a guard who wanted to sleep with a woman could take the one he liked. We had a woman there who would have 20 men in a night and in the morning she would be unconscious.

"There were four or five women guards, Libyans, who would kill the women prisoners by cutting their throats.

Chief Fingers Amin

LONDON (Reuter) — Uganda's former police chief has surrendered to liberation forces and accused Idi Amin of murdering the Anglican archbishop of Uganda and two cabinet ministers, Kampala radio said Thursday night.

The broadcast said that Kassim Obura, who was police commissioner in the overthrown Amin regime, made the charge while talking to correspondents at Makindye military barracks in Kampala.

Archbishop Janani Luwum, Interior Minister Arphaked Oboth-Ofumbi and Land Minister Erenayo Wilson Oryema were arrested in February 1977 and accused of being involved in a plot to overthrow Amin.

Shortly afterwards the government announced that the three men had been killed in a road accident while in custody. The official radio said they were trying to overpower an officer in a bid to escape.

Dealer Charged With Wine Fraud

DIJON, France (CP) — An examining magistrate today charged a wine dealer with fraud for allegedly exporting ordinary wine under prestigious burgundy labels to the United States.

Judge Jean Francois Perrin notified the defendant, Bernard Noel Grivelet, a dealer from the famed Chambolle Musigny area, of the charge but did not order his arrest. Grivelet is to be questioned in the presence of his lawyers later this month.

A spokesman for the fraud squad said Grivelet is accused of sending 15,000 bottles of ordinary table wine across the Atlantic labelled as vintage burgundy.

The bottles sold for around $22 each, and Grivelet is alleged to have made an illicit profit of more than $200,000.

'Food Fanatics' Starve 2 Children

NEW YORK (UPI) — A middle-aged couple authorities called "health food fanatics" has been charged with starving their two infant sons to death.

Edward and Suzette Halper were indicted on charges of manslaughter and criminally negligent homicide Thursday following an investigation into the death of 15-month-old Darwin Halper on March 18, 1979, and 4-month-old Arthur Halper on Sept. 20, 1976.

A spokesman for Queens District Attorney John Santucci said the couple gave the children very little food and when they did "fed them a diet of organically grown fruit, vegetables and plants, including a type of Irish seaweed that looked like rubber cement when its boiled."

"They were a pair of health food fanatics," he said.

At the couple's arraignment Santucci said one of the babies was so emaciated when he died "that he looked like an Auschwitz victim ... nothing but some skin covering a bundle of bones."

State Supreme Court Judge William Brennan set bail at $25,000 each.

Several times during the hearing, the judge criticized defence attorney Clement Segal for saying his clients "committed no crime." Brennan intimated that the parents were too busy at their jobs to have cared for their sons.

The Medical Examiner's Office, which previously certified the cause of death in both instances as malnutrition, said Darwin weighed slightly over 7 pounds when he died, about the weight of a newborn baby. An autopsy disclosed he had not been fed during the last two days of his life.

Mrs. Halper appeared extremely agitated as the charges were read.

When the judge was told that the 37-year-old legal secretary started a second job at night just before Darwin died, she clutched attorney Segal's arm for support.

"Maybe working a second job was part of the problem," Judge Brennan told the defence counsel. Segal insisted the babies "were never left alone and (were) well taken care of."

He added that Halper, 42, a floorman for a fur company for 20 years, had been a good provider and a good father.

When the Halpers' first son, Arthur, died in 1976, he weighed 4 pounds, 11 ounces. His death was first regarded as natural until suspicions were raised in the similarity to Darwin's death.

U.K. Inflation Double-Digits

LONDON (AP) — Britain's annual inflation rate moved into double figures in April for the first time since December, 1977, the employment department announced today.

The department said the rise in retail prices on a year-to-year basis stood at 10.1 per cent in April, compared with 9.8 per cent in March, 9.6 per cent in February and 9.3 per cent in January.

The inflation rate was in double digits for the first time since December, 1977, when it was at 12.1 per cent. In January, 1978 the inflation rate had dropped to 9.9 per cent.

The department said the April increase was caused primarily by higher cost of rents and gasoline.

The rising inflation rate poses a major economic problem for the new government of Margaret Thatcher, whose Conservative party won the May 3 general election and ended five years of moderate socialism under the Labor party of James Callaghan.

Labor boasted in the campaign that it had brought the annual inflation rate into single figures from a peak of 26 per cent in the late summer of 1975.

The Labor government relied primarily on wage restraint and price controls to curb inflation. But Mrs. Thatcher, a champion of free enterprise, has promised to allow market forces freer rein. During her campaign she maintained that the best way to curb inflation is unfettered competition in the marketplace.

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market inched higher despite several reports by influential business organizations predicting a recession during the second half of 1979.

The Business Council, composed of top corporate executives, predicted a brief recession would strike during the second half. But Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal and Federal Reserve Board Chairman G. William Miller said the Carter administration and the Fed still expect a recession can be avoided.

Citibank said a recession will begin "in the next few months." The downturn will be "distinctly worse" than those of 1960 or 1970, but "not nearly as bad" as the recession of 1973-1975, it said.

Merrill Lynch Economics' analysts said, meanwhile, Federal Reserve Board credit-tightening actions may ensure "a recession by year-end."

Gaming industry issues were higher in active trading. Bally added 1⅜ to $64. It said its shareholders will be offered the chance to buy up to17 percent of its Atlantic City, N.J., subsidiary.

The NYSE's composite common-stock index was unchanged at 55.45.

London

LONDON (Reuter) — The London stock market was mixed at the close of light trading.

The Financial Times Index of 30 industrials closed at 532.8, up 0.1.

SPC Hits Boost By TCPL

REGINA (CP) — A Saskatchewan Power Corp. spokesman says a TransCanada PipeLines Ltd. application to increase its rate of return on shipments of Alberta natural gas could cost SPC $500,000 a year.

TCPL has applied to the National Energy Board for permission to increase its rate of return to 11.22 per cent from 10.75 per cent of its revenues. The board will hear the application in Ottawa May 15.

Ron Fessant of SPC said the Saskatchewan crown corporation now pays TCPL about $3 million a year to transport gas from Alberta but the amount would increase to about $3.5 million if the rate increase is approved.

He said SPC expects to intervene at the hearing.

Efficiency 'Key' to Forest Firms' Future

VANCOUVER (CP) — Forest product firms in British Columbia must stress efficiency in all areas if they are to retain a fair share of the market, says the president of the Council of Forest Industries of B.C.

Donald Lanskail told the council's recent annual meeting the industry must regenerate and enhance the forests, modernize manufacturing facilities, expand markets, improve their reputations as reliable suppliers and attract more management talent.

R. B. Fisher, the council's outgoing chairman, said the industry should not rely on the competitive advantage enjoyed by forest product exporters because of the discounted Canadian dollar.

"Our competitiveness will have to be found in our ability to manage our costs and improve out productivity," said Fisher.

Jake Warren, Canadian co-ordinator for the multilateral trade negotiations in Geneva, told the meeting that a number of important concessions were obtained for the forest-products sector in the recent General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

He said the concessions should enhance Canada's ability to increase exports of traditional and newer products to major foreign markets.

"The importance of this agreement will be particularly evident to B.C. forest product producers," he said.

In Japan, the tariffs on rough lumber will be lowered, as will duties on a number of lumber products and prefabricated and sectional housing, Warren said.

Japan's tariffs also will be reduced on some softwood plywood, waferboard and particleboard.

In the European Economic Community, tariffs will be reduced on wood and paper products.

"The agreement with the U.S. is part of an understanding which looks toward the development of common North American standards for softwood plywood," Warren added.

The agreement also should reduce technical barriers to trade by requiring signatories to ensure that neither product standards nor related certification systems create unnecessary obstacles to international trade, he said.

"You (the forest industry) have already pioneered in this field in overcoming technical barriers to Canadian lumber exports to many markets. The federal government now will be able to assist you even more in overcoming these obstacles."

Profits Soaring This Year

MONTREAL (CP) — Canadian corporate profits leaped by 49 per cent in the first quarter of 1979 to $1.56 billion from $1.04 billion for the same period last year, says a Canadian Dow Jones survey of 153 companies.

This was the strongest gain since a 53-per-cent rise in the second quarter of 1974, but far below a record 73-per-cent jump in the fourth quarter of 1973.

The latest increase was the 12th quarterly advance after six consecutive quarters of reduced earnings. But the gain was generally greater than anticipated by economists and analysts.

Nesbitt Thomson Bongard Inc. says the value of the Canadian dollar, higher wages and salary expenses, and higher interest costs "will still affect earnings adversely.

"While these cost pressures have already begun, they have not shown up yet in year-over-year comparisons but should by the second quarter."

Richardson Securities of Canada notes the relative health of the U.S. economy could influence the performance of Canada's export trade — the major sector of the Canadian economy.

Dome Bids for Pipe Stock

CALGARY (CP) — Dome Petroleum Ltd. has not decided what changes it will make if its offer to purchase 10.6 million shares of TransCanada PipeLines Ltd. is accepted, a Dome spokesman said Wednesday.

Dean Geddes, special assistant to Dome president Jack Gakkagher, said in an interview the company had no "definitive plans" for TransCanada.

Trading in TransCanada shares was halted at the opening of the Toronto Stock Exchange Wednesday until 11 a.m. because of Dome's announcement.

TransCanada shares traded at $19.88 at the close Tuesday. Dome has offered $23.

Geddes said the reason for the offer, which would increase Dome's share to 49 per cent from 22.5, was "fairly simple — it merely improves Dome's influence and control over TransCanada PipeLines."

The investment was expected to support itself, he said. It would not detract from Dome's extensive exploration efforts in the Arctic.

Dome's increased ownership in TransCanada would make no major difference in the roles of Dome and TransCanada in attempts to increase industry gas exports, he said.

Dome's current ownership in the company was large enough to encourage plans to "prebuild" the southern portion of the Alaska Highway gas pipeline, and to achieve co-operation between gas export groups.

Under the prebuilding concept, that portion of the project would be built early and used to export Alberta gas until Alaska gas begins to flow.

James W. Kerr, chairman and chief executive officer of TransCanada, said in Toronto the directors will consider the new Dome bid "in the near future."

The offer expires May 24.

Job Hoppers Praised

TORONTO (CP) — Job-hopping is becoming more prevalent these days and Tom Jackson heartily approves.

The New York employment consultant said Wednesday that even senior executives are changing jobs more frequently.

"I recommend that you switch jobs at least every five years," Jackson said in an interview. "I'd also like to see every employer fire 10 per cent of his most unproductive staff tomorrow.

"For those who are fired, it will be the best opportunity they've had in years."

Jackson, president of Comtrain Inc., said people impose limitations on themselves, and as a result they are unable to grow because they are burdened with a work identity.

"We have to recognize that we are humans first, not steelworkers or garbagemen. We have to do away with the attitude that 'it's either this job or nothing.'

Most Companies Paying Too Much for Telephones

EDMONTON (CP) — Most Canadian businesses pay too much for their telephone bills and other telecommunications services, H. C. Welch, vice-president of National Utility service (Canada) Ltd., said Wednesday.

"The telephone companies aren't dishonest, it's just that firms don't know how to make the most economical use of their telephones and other telecommunications systems," Welch said.

His firm says it can trim telecommunications bills for 90 per cent of its customers by carefully analyzing needs, past billings and equipments.

Savings of as much as $120,000 a year for some clients come mainly thorough better utilization of equipment and staff discipline.

"My company's job is to provide optimum service at minimum costs," Welch said.

National Utility, a worldwide firm which has been telling customers since 1932 how to cut down on energy bills, entered the field of telecommunications cost-saving seven years ago.

The firm charges an initial fee of $500 to $8,500, depending on the size of the client it is trying to help. Once the client starts to save money, National Utility takes 50 per cent of the savings which leaves a 10 to 15 per cent profit after expenses are paid.

Protection for your new home investment.

The New Home Warranty Program of British Columbia and the Yukon was initiated by the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, B.C. Council and was established in April, 1976.

It's a nice warm feeling ....

The Warranty means protection for you and your investment in a new home, five kinds of protection for five years from the date of purchase.

- Your deposit (money you paid in good faith to bind the contract) to the registered builder is protected, up to $5,000.
- Registered builders provide a one year workmanship and materials warranty, which is guaranteed by the Program.
- You are protected against structural defects in your new home to the end of the fifth year from date of occupancy, up to $20,000.
- In the event of a dispute with your builder, the Program provides impartial conciliation to help you resolve your differences.
- And, if you decide to sell your new home during the five year period, the balance of the warranty is transferable to the new owner.

Today, there are over 10,000 new homes in B.C. and the Yukon protected by the New Home Warranty Program. Look for this sign when buying your new home.

X-Ray Warning 10 Years Old

TORONTO (CP) — Ontario was warned at least 10 years ago that patients taking x-rays at some hospitals are exposed to high radiation levels, but no action has been taken, says the president of the Ontario Society of Radiological Technologists.

Gail Moffatt said Thursday in Kitchener, Ont., that the society did not publicize the hazards of x-ray radiation because it did not want to frighten patients who might refuse x-rays necessary for diagnosis.

Health Minister Dennis Timbrell told the legislature that although a study has shown that Ontario residents are exposed to excessive radiation from x-ray equipment, no sensible person should ever refuse one.

Timbrell, facing a bombardment of questions from opposition members, said he wanted to point out that the study had funding from his ministry which also was assisting a more detailed report over the next three years.

The study, by Dr. Kenneth Taylor, a radiation physicist at the University of Toronto, and two colleagues, said a survey of 20 Ontario hospitals showed that a patient in one hospital may receive as much as 60 times the exposure given to a patient in another hospital.

The variation results from the condition of the diagnostic equipment and the different ways an x-ray machine is operated, the study said.

Timbrell said the more detailed project, announced Wednesday, would identify ways to educate those who give x-rays. This could result, he said, in new regulations governing licensing for x-ray operators.

Liberal Leader Stuart Smith and NDP Leader Michael Cassidy asked why corrective steps had not been taken earlier.

Mrs. Moffatt said her society has been pressing the government to implement a licensing system that would weed out unqualified x-ray operators who endanger the public.

Registered technologists undergo a two-year training program, she pointed out.

She said part of the problem is that machines are not inspected often enough.

Cassidy said all inefficient machinery must be identified immediately and taken out of action.

Outside the legislature, Timbrell said that "swooping down on every x-ray machine overnight would not solve the problem."

'Hybrid' Auto Sold

MONTREAL (CP) — A couple who borrowed money to buy a "practically new" 1974 Pontiac LeMans will not have to pay back the loan because the car turned out to be the welded front and rear halves of two wrecked cars.

Judge Ignace J. Deslauriers dismissed Thursday a suit by Trans Canada Credit to recover the outstanding balance — $3,574 — of the loan the couple took out to buy the car from a suburban Terrebonne dealer in 1975.

The couple would not have bought the car nor signed for the loan had they known the car was a "hybrid", said Judge Deslauriers, adding that he wasn't convinced the car was a Pontiac LeMans.

The car's doubtful pedigree was discovered less than a month after purchase when it hit a truck after its brakes failed at a highway toll booth.

Mechanics at the garage where the car was taken for repair discovered it had been welded across the middle.

An engineer who examined the car testified that undamaged parts of two wrecked cars had been used to produce the "hybrid". He said the workmanship was poor, the brakes were defective and the front bumper had been welded to the chassis.

Court Ruling Hits RCMP

TORONTO (CP) — The Ontario Court of Appeal has ruled that the RCMP must provide a royal commission with names of doctors and other health workers who gave the force confidential health information without patients' consent.

The decision, released Thursday, permits the Ontario commission on confidentiality of health records, under Mr. Justice Horace Krever, to resume investigative hearings into RCMP access and use of personal health records. However, the decision was not unanimous.

Mr. Justice Charles Dubin and Madam Justice Bertha Wilson upheld the royal commission chief's ruling last year that the federal force had no right to withhold the information. But the senior judge, Mr. Justice J. W. Brooke, argued that no names should be disclosed owing to the traditional privilege of police informants.

Dubin said that members of the medical profession had a duty of confidentiality to patients. Under the Health Disciplines Act of 1974, he said "that duty became a matter of regulation."

He said RCMP lawyers had conceded that their information "was not obtained by due process of law and the physicians were not required by law to provide the information."

On the matter of privilege for informants, he said: "In my opinion, there can be no privilege when the informer . . is in breach of a legal duty not to disclose such information."

Flood Crest Moves North

WINNIPEG (CP) — The crest of the Red River continued its slow northward progress today after turning much of the southern Manitoba farm land into a shallow lake.

The flood-swollen river, which has caused an undetermined amount of damage through the valley, posed no danger to Winnipeg, which is protected by a floodway.

While Winnipeggers were thankful for the multi-million-dollar system, built to prevent a recurrence of the major 1950 flood, others were not so fortunate.

Government officials have asked those whose homes lie outside the protected communities to check with their municipal office before trying to return.

The 180 residents of Letellier, located 15 kilometres north of the international border, got the official go-ahead Thursday to return to their homes.

However, a visitor to Letellier found many people ignored the evacuation order given about two weeks ago and stayed behind to keep an eye on their homes.

The town itself remained dry, but there was some damage to farms nearby.

Some residents estimated only about 50 people, mostly women and old folks, left Letellier when flood waters were high around the dike-protected town.

For others, life was almost normal. A grocery store owner said his shop, like others in Letellier, was open through the flood and did a steady business.

Diabetics Pushing 'Safe' Sweetener

TORONTO (UPC) — Since the banning of cyclamates and saccharine, Canadian diabetics have joined forces with soft drink manufacturers to urge approval of a new sweetener.

The Canadian Diabetic Association announced Thursday it has joined manufacturers in urging the Health Protection Branch of Health and Welfare Canada to make a quick decision on the protein-derived sweetener Aspartame.

"According to available data, Aspartame has been found safe for use as a substitute for cyclamate and saccharine," said association president Dr. C.K. Gorman. He said the sweetener "would serve the needs of 700,000 diabetics."

T.P. McGregor, executive director of the Canadian Soft Drink Association, said "the industry is concerned that an arbitrary decision by the Health Protection Branch could deprive Canadian soft drink manufacturers and consumers of the only sweetener on the horizon which would permit production of sugar-free beverages."

Mayor Dies In Winnipeg

WINNIPEG (CP) — Robert Steen, mayor of Winnipeg for the last 18 months, died Thursday night in hospital, where he had been under treatment for cancer of the liver.

Steen, 45, entered the hospital March 5 with what his office described as a severe chest cold. But the illness proved more serious and he later slipped into a coma.

Steen's last public appearance of note was March 3, when he went to New York City to hear the Winnipeg Symphony Orchestra perform at a benefit concert in Carnegie Hall.

Two days later, he checked into hospital and his condition rapidly deteriorated.

Steen, a lawyer, is survived by his wife Irene and two sons, Graham, 12, and Garnet, 8. He is also survived by a brother Warren, Progressive Conservative member of the legislature.

His election as mayor on Oct. 26, 1977, was the high point in a political career that included experience at the federal, provincial and local level.

Steen joined the Progressive Conservative party as a young man and was an active volunteer worker for the party while he was still in his teens.

Rail Workers Shun 10% Hike

MONTREAL (CP) — Railway shop-craft workers have soundly rejected a proposed three-year contract which would have given them a 10 per cent wage increase this year, it was announced Thursday.

The 22,000 workers service and repair the trains for CN Rail, CP Rail and several smaller lines. Their last contract expired Dec. 31.

Almost 63 per cent of those voting were against the contract, which would have boosted wages 28.3 per cent by January, 1981. The final count was 13,282 to 7,490 for rejection.

The workers aren't in a legal strike position and won't be for several weeks, but industry officials don't discount the possibility that rank-and-file militants may try to organize wildcat protests.

Union leaders say their next move will be to ask the railways to reopen negotiations. That request will be made next Tuesday, when the eight shop-craft unions meet with the companies to give them the official vote results.

Elections Act Chops Down Platforms

By LINDSAY CRYSLER
FP News Services

OTTAWA — What could be a controversial section of the new Canada Elections Act likely will not get tested during the current federal election campaign — unless some publication stumbles blindly into trouble.

A principal provision of the revised Elections Act of 1977 is that a limit was placed on election expenses — and what was allowable as an expense was spelled out in some details.

Now a difficulty has arisen over interpretations that would prevent daily newspapers, and presumably other publications, from providing as a public service a platform for candidates to discuss election issues. These interpretations of the Act suggest that some of this material may, under the Act, be "advertising," or propaganda.

Newspapers, always jealous of their prerogatives, have had an historic rule of thumb — news is what they give away, advertising is what they charge for.

The current dust-up began when the Calgary Herald was doing some research on a small Alberta paper which came afoul of the election law. When they had the material together, someone at the Herald wondered out loud whether what they had found would effect an election supplement the Herald was planning for May 21.

The paper planned to put five questions to all the candidates running in area constituencies. The first four asked for candidates' position on four specific election issues. A fifth question asked candidates to pinpoint the most important issue in their riding — and where they stood on that issue.

When the paper checked by telephone in Ottawa with Joseph Gorman, Commissioner of Canada Elections, there was no problem with the first four questions. But the fifth question, the commissioner's office said, could be construed as providing a platform for a candidate, an opportunity to propagandize — in short, an advertisement.

As such, the candidates would be charged with an election expense, based on the length of their statement in column inches and the Herald's rate card.

"What they were going to do," fumed Herald Editor Bill Gold, "was to charge them for space that they couldn't buy in a million years."

Gold's journalistic dudgeon is always bubbling and quivering just below the surface, ready to erupt at the first hint of bureaucracy and red tape. He says the Herald was tempted to publish and be damned, relishing the chance to test the new law in court.

But, says Gold, they discovered it would the paper would not be charged with a breach of the Elections Act — it would be the candidates, if the amount charged to them as advertising in the Herald were to put them over the allowable limit of election expenses.

The Herald tried to figure out a way to run the supplement anyway, but finally gave up.

Says Gold:

"What we realized we were really doing was negotiating whether or not we would run the news, so we dropped it."

The Herald dropped it in typical Gold style — a flaming page one editorial early this week.

A subsequent phone call from the election commissioner's office indicated that perhaps the open-ended question would be all right after all, but only if it ran on May 19 or earlier, not on May 21, the day before the election — when the law prohibits partisan political statements being published.

The Herald editor exploded.

"Now they are saying that what is news on Saturday is advertising on Monday."

Well, maybe not. A spokesman in the Commissioner's office said Thursday afternoon that, in fact, there still had not been a final decision in the Herald's case — it was actively being discussed and debated among electoral officials. But, it was, he said, "a can of worms" that the bureaucrats weren't any happier about than was editor Gold.

He also had some news for the Herald's circulation department: apparently not everybody reads Herald editorials — even those on the front page. He had had calls that very day from Alberta candidates who wanted guidance on what to do with the questionnaire — the one designed for the supplement that will never run.

ELECTION 79

Polls Arouse Anger

OTTAWA (CP) — Political campaign organizers for the May 22 federal election are watching nervously for results from a flurry of polls on voter opinion to be published in the next nine days.

One almost-certain result of polls by Gallup, the CBC and CTV will be more argument about the polls themselves and their publication.

At least 66 per cent of the main political parties — the two out of three shown lagging — will protest or dismiss the poll results as being out of date and distorted. In fact, if the two leading parties are as much as five percentage points apart, either could be leading.

Political scientists and others who study the electoral process complain that the way the results are presented is misleading, possibly disruptive.

Some say publication of poll results should be banned at election time because they may generate a bandwagon influence among voters.

The Toronto-based Canadian Institute of Public Opinion, better known as The Gallup Report after American founder George Gallup, issues results of twt voter polls to its subscribing newspapers May 12 and May 19.

CBC-TV, whose polling is designed and conducted by the Carleton University School of Journalism in Ottawa, will broadcast its latest sampling May 14. The CTV television network, which runs its own poll, carries a new one May 20.

Results from voter samplings conducted by each of these organizations earlier in the election campaign appeared to conflict, with both the Liberals and the Conservatives variously reported leading in popular favor.

Experts say the confusion arose because statistical fine print in the results tended to be overlooked. Allowing for built-in error and examining the raw results really indicated the main two parties were running neck-and-neck, with about one-third of the people polled falling into the category pollsters call DKNA — Don't-Know, No-Answer.

The main complaint by politicians, scholars and even some pollsters is that the information featured in news headlines and broadcasts — "Liberals Lead, Gallup Says" or "CBC Poll Puts Tories Ahead" — tends to bury important factors about polls.

'Arrogance at the Highest Level'

LIVERPOOL, N.S. (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau's recent remark that he would hold on to power despite a possible reduced majority after the May 22 federal election indicates "arrogance at its highest" on Trudeau's part, former Nova Scotia premier G.I. Smith said Thursday.

Smith told a Progressive Conservative rally in this South Shore Nova Scotia town that Canada was united when Trudeau came to power in 1968, "and now there is separatism."

In 1968, the economy was healthy and inflation under control, whereas now "the deficit for 1979-80 is $12 billion. That's more than the whole budget when Trudeau took over."

Smith disputed the prime minister's claim that inflation has been wrestled to the ground. He said figures do not lie, and they do not indicate inflation has been beaten.

Built-in Tax Cuts About to Vanish?

By CAROL GOAR

OTTAWA (CP) - Whichever party forms the government after May 22 may be advised by officials to end the present income tax system with its built-in annual reductions in personal tax rates.

Liberals and Progressive Conservatives have both pledged to reduce the federal deficit, at the same time promising new spending programs and tax breaks.

Federal spending now exceeds income by more than $11 billion a year, leaving the government to borrow more than 20 cents of every dollar it spends to cover its deficit.

Spokesmen from both parties say privately they may have to consider ending a five-year-old income tax provision which automatically compensates for the rising cost of living.

This provision automatically raises taxpayer exemptions each January to match the year's cost-of-living increase. In the 1979 taxation year, for example, the basic personal income tax exemption went to $2,650 from $2,430 in 1978.

Although indexing gives taxpayers some relief from inflation, it has reduced government revenue by $6 billion since John Turner, then finance minister, introduced it in 1975.

No major politician would risk opening such a can of worms in the final days of an election campaign. Ending indexing amounts to imposing a tax increase.

But finance department analysts and Conservative economic experts are quietly suggesting that abolishing indexing may be the least painful way to increase government revenue.

A senior finance official said in an interview: "If one has to raise taxes, eliminating the indexing of the income tax is one of the easiest things to do."

The issue does not concern the New Democratic Party which is not committed to reducing the deficit. Party leader Ed Broadbent says a larger deficit is acceptable as long as it provides the groundwork for economic growth and more equitable distribution of wealth.

Both the Liberals and the Conservatives have pledged to reduce last year's $11.4 billion deficit by cutting government expenditures.

The Liberals started last fall in the federal budget by slashing $150 million from planned spending and by eliminating 5,000 public service positions. The spending cuts hit programs ranging from family allowance and unemployment insurance payments to forestry research.

The Conservatives, pledged to multi-billion dollar spending they concede will widen the deficit, at least temporarily, say they can trim spending by such things as reducing the public service by 60,000 in the next three years, by dropping outdated laws and agencies and by dismantling several large Crown corporations.

But when pressed, spokesmen for both parties say there is a limit to spending cuts, especially when 60 per cent of federal tax revenue is transferred to the provinces.

How far the new finance minister could push his cabinet and provincial colleagues in trimming their budgets against complaints from the poor, the unemployed, the science community, the arts, the provinces, consumers advocates and dozens of other groups became intolerable, is questionable.

At that point, the focus would shift to finding more money. Some economists are convinced the crunch will come early in the 1980s.

Unmade-Bed-Looking Face a Winner

Scott's World

By VERNON SCOTT
United Press International

HOLLYWOOD — Walter Matthau shuffled into the Universal Studios commissary looking like an unmade bed, grumbling with the ferocity of a bear awakened from hibernation.

His hair was dishevelled. He wore a 1930s vest and baggy trousers. His necktie was askew. His pointed wing-tipped shoes were scuffed. Walter's rumpled face was arranged in its customary doleful configuration.

He was the archtypical Runyonesque character, Sorrowful Jones, which he plays in the studio's remake of Little Miss Marker.

It was noontime in the busy studio and Walter was taking his lunch break. He ordered his meal dyspeptically.

"Don't ask me about the kid," he growled. Matthau's reference was to tiny Sara Stimson, the six-year-old who plays the Shirley Temple role in the screenplay based on Damon Runyon's story of a race horse bookie who is stuck with the kid as a "marker" for a losing bet.

Matthau steadfastly has ignored W. C. Fields' admonition against working with dogs or children, both notorious scene stealers. But filching a scene from Matthau with his basset hound face is well nigh impossible.

One of his best-loved films was The Bad News Bears in which he played with prepubescent baseball moppets.

"That stuff about kid actors is a cliche, I tell you," Matthau said. "I don't want to talk about that little Sara. She's all right."

"My problem is the Dodgers. I keep losing bets on them and it's driving me crazy."

Matthau is type-cast in Little Miss Marker. An inveterate gambler himself, he wagers daily on the outcome of baseball games, placing bets based on Dodger pitchers who are having a lousy year.

"This part is perfect for me," he said.

After lunch he ambled over to the barren office of Walcar Productions, which co-produces his films and takes a healthy bite of the profits.

He dialed the telephone and said, "Hello, Willy? This is Joey. Who's starting for the Dodgers tonight?"

Conference on Children's TV Lacked One Thing: Children

QUEBEC (CP) — There weren't any children at a conference on children's television in the 1980s, and broadcaster Patrick Watson says he found the results disappointing but not completely fruitless.

"We almost achieved something, which is something that so rarely happens at conferences," Watson, who has been host of several public affairs programs on CBC television, said Thursday at the end of the six-day meeting, attended by 65 television producers from 20 countries.

"We should have invited some real political radicals to shake things up," he said.

Watson sat in on the six workshop discussion groups at the conference and reported his findings at a plenary session. He complained that there were no children at the meeting and the past was talked about, rather than the future.

"These were the discussions we had 23 years ago when I was learning the elements of being a television producer," he said. "I hope people go away thinking this is unfinished business."

But he did agree with one participant who said that all television should be treated as if it were theatre. "We had a show that tried to do just that about 15 years ago.

"It was called This Hour Has Seven Days and it had a certain limited, if short-lived success."

Watson and Laurier Lapierre were co-hosts of the show. They were fired that the show cancelled despite high ratings because CBC management thought it went too far.

Looking to the future, Watson said that new technology such as fibre optics, micro-chip circuitry and satellites had not been brought up at the conference.

"We should see where technology is taking us before it swallows us," he said.

"I think that would be fabulous."

Detente Traced to Cyrus the Great Dissenter

CLEVELAND (AP) — Cyrus Eaton was the most unusual of capitalists.

During the Cold War, he was called a Communist or a fool for advocating peaceful co-existence with the Soviet Union.

But on Thursday, after Eaton died at the age of 95, President Carter credited him with starting the process that led to detente.

Eaton died Wednesday at Acadia Farms, his home in Northfield just outside Cleveland. Private funeral services will be held in his native Nova Scotia but the schedule had not been completed early today.

Eaton, a native of Pugwash, N.S., began poor but amassed $1 million by age 28 and $100 million by age 48. His empire crumbled in 1929. He built it anew.

At one time or another, he held controlling interests in Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., Republic Steel Corp., Detroit Steel, Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co. and the Chessie Systems Inc.

He once was a Republican, but he turned New Deal Democrat. And he alienated many in financial circles in those years by calling John L. Lewis, United Mine Workers union chief, and Phillip Murray of the Congress of Industrial Organizations two of the smartest men he knew.

But dissension did not seem to bother him.

"My detractors are my inspiration," he once said.

Perhaps his greatest controversy involved efforts to stimulate understanding with the Soviet Union and other Communist countries.

That campaign began in 1955, when he played host to a delegation of Russian journalists who had asked to meet a U.S. capitalist. The meeting, at his farm, set Eaton trying to build Western contacts with top Communists, in pursuit of peace.

That year he established the so-called Pugwash Conferences — what he would later call his greatest accomplishment — and invited scientists, authors, scholars and statesmen to Thinkers Lodge, his ancestral home in Pugwash, N.S., to consider ways to lessen the hazards of nuclear, biological and chemical warfare.

Diplomats said it was at a Pugwash Conference in Moscow in 1960 that Walt Rostow and Jerome Wiesner, then advisers to President-elect John F. Kennedy, informally agreed with Soviet officials on common grounds that led to the nuclear test-ban treaty.

Eaton visited Moscow a number of times and got to know Soviet Premiers Nikita Khruschchev and Alexei Kosygin. When they came to the United States, he helped make the arrangements and entertained them.

But he bristled at suggestions he was being taken in.

"One thing you can say about capitalists is that they want to make a profit," he once said. "There is not much to gain if the United States spends $50 billion a year on armaments which ultimately will only blow us all up."

'Want Someone Bumped Off?'

LONDON (AP) — Former Liberal leader Jeremy Thorpe said killing Norman Scott would be "no worse than shooting a sick dog" and spoke frequently of the "ultimate solution" for the alleged former lover he is accused of plotting to murder, the prosecution says.

Prosecutor Peter Taylor told the jury at the Old Bailey criminal court Thursday that Thorpe told Liberal MP Peter Bessell of the plan to kill Scott and dump his body in an abandoned tin mine when the two politicians met in the House of Commons in 1968.

Bessell, now living in California, was to be the prosecution's first witness today. Scott, now working as a horse groom, is to testify later in the trial.

Thorpe, who resigned as Liberal leader in 1976 and lost his seat in Parliament in the general election last week, has denied the accusation of homosexuality. He and three co-defendants pleaded not guilty to charges of conspiring to murder Scott to stop his talk about the alleged relationship.

Thorpe's co-defendants are David Holmes, the Liberal party's former deputy treasurer, and John Le Mesurier and George Deakin, businessmen in Wales.

The prosecutor said Deakin at a dinner party on Feb. 25, 1975, recruited former pilot Andrew Newton to shoot Scott.

"In the course of the evening, Newton said to Deakin, 'Is it true you want someone bumped off?' and proceeded to volunteer his services," Taylor said:

"Newton armed himself with an old pistol — a Mauser automatic — and some ammunition," Taylor continued. He said Newton drove Scott onto the Devon moors, shot Scott's pet Great Dane, Rinka.

Newton was convicted of a firearms offence and after serving his sentence Le Mesurier paid him $10,000, the prosecutor said. He said that he will show photographs of the payoff.

Seven of 'Soweto 11' Get Suspended Terms

KEMPTON PARK, South Africa (AP) — A South African court gave suspended sentences today to seven of the 11 students convicted of sedition in the so-called "Soweto-11" trial. The other four drew prison terms ranging from two to four years.

Sechaba Da Montsitsi, 23, the former chairman of the Soweto Student Representative Council, received the stiffest punishment, an eight-year term. But Judge Hendriu Van Dyk suspended four years of his sentence.

The 11 students — 10 men and a woman ranging in age from 18 to 23 — were found guilty April 30 of sedition for their roles in organizing and leading the black riots which ripped through the black township of Soweto in 1976.

The prosecutor had sought "robust" jail terms, while the defence asked that all sentences be suspended.

After today's sentencing, defense attorney Ernest Wentzel said he would appeal the terms.

The four defendants sentenced to serve jail terms were: Montsitsi, eight years; Matison Morobe, 22, seven years; Susan Sibengile Mthembu, 23 and Seth Sandile Mazibuko, 19, six years each. In each case, the judge suspended four years of the sentence.

The other seven, who received five-year suspended sentences, were: Wilson Twala, 18, Khotso Wanfi Lengane, 22, Thabo Ndabeni, 21, Kennedy Mogami, 19, Reginald Teboho Mgomezulu, 21, Michael Khiba, 20 and George Kkosinati, 23.

More than 600 blacks died in the rioting that caused more than $70 million in damage.

Thatcher Increases Military by 32%

Times News Services

LONDON — Britain's new Conservative government announced a pay raise for the armed forces Thursday in an effort to stave off the loss of military personnel because of low salaries.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher raised a military pay increase of 24.2 per cent, agreed to by the ousted Labor government, to 32 per cent.

It is retroactive to April and will cost $224 million (U.S.) a year.

Her government also raised salaries for policemen.

Also Thursday, Thatcher met with Premier Jack Lynch of Ireland to discuss the conflict in Northern Ireland, then started a two-day conference with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

In a dinner address, Mrs. Thatcher pledged her support for a strong military defence in Western Europe and committed her government to working actively to develop the European Economic Community (EEC).

Meanwhile, Anthony Wedgewood Benn, a yeoman of the Labor party's left wing, withdrew from James Callaghan's opposition directorate Thursday, indicating a split in the party and a possible fight for succession when the former prime minister steps down as party leader.

Benn, 54, was energy minister in Callaghan's government, which was ousted in last week's elections.

Benn's manoeuvre was considered as the start of a bid for party leadership after retirement of the more moderate Callaghan, 67.

Callaghan, who had no comment on Benn's action, was unanimously re-elected Wednesday to the Labor leadership.

Prisoners Used To Thaw Talks

PEKING (AP) — China, seeking to break the deadlock in peace talks with Vietnam, said today it will free about 1,000 Vietnamese troops it captured in the border war with its southern neighbor.

Vice Foreign Minister Zhong Xidong (Chung Hsi-tung) announced plans for the phased repatriation at a news conference.

Zhong said China would release the men unilaterally, adding China would propose at the next session of the peace talks in Hanoi on Saturday that Vietnam free some 200 Chinese he said were captured in the month-long war, which began Feb. 17.

The repatriation will begin May 19 with the first group of about 100 Vietnamese to be handed over at a point between Friendship Pass and Dong Dang, scene of some of the heaviest fighting of the war, he said.

6 Burned In Buses

SAN SALVADOR (AP) — El Salvador's military government said leftist guerrillas burned six persons to death in buses as thousands turned out for the funeral of 17 anti-government demonstrators.

Popular Liberation Forces, fighting President Carlos Humberto Romero's military regime, shot up two buses 86 kilometres north of here, causing the deaths, the sources said.

MB REPORTS: The fourth in a series of five.

For our future, good forest management is good business.

For a generation, MacMillan Bloedel has been British Columbia's leader in forest care. We plant at least four trees for every one we cut. Now resource management moves to a new phase as science and common sense combine to improve the harvest.

There is little more mystery about growing better crops of trees than there is to growing better carrots or raspberries—you start with good stock and do some practical gardening.

For the best seeds, the province and MB gather healthy cones from big, vigorous trees. Seedlings are given a well-fed start in life in vast nurseries.

We prepare the ground for planting, making certain that we select the right kind of species for the area. For instance, hemlock does better on moist sites, while Douglas-fir excels on dry, sunny slopes.

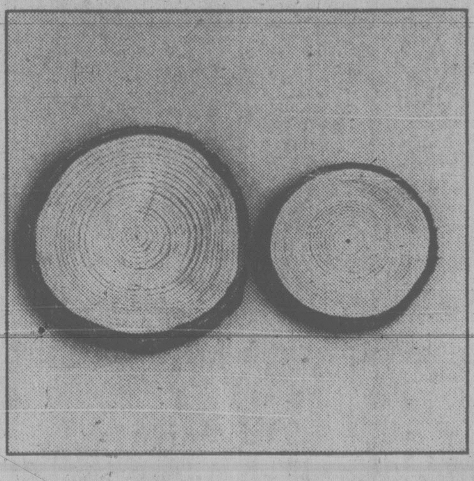
In recent years, fertilizing has proved to be a cost-efficient way to speed up growth and make a stand ready for harvesting in a shorter time.

Any gardener knows that thinning is essential. It's the same with trees. You thin out the weaklings to provide more water, nutrients, sun and space for those that remain.

The science and art of forest management is evolving at an exciting pace. MacMillan Bloedel foresters work closely with provincial foresters. Together, we are helping place B.C. in the forefront in efficient forest management.

Today we have one of the best systems for predicting future yields, modern forest inventories, prompt reforestation and a program of stand treatment which is being further intensified to a new level called "the designed forest". And we plant at least four trees for every one we cut. MacMillan Bloedel plans for the future because we're here to stay.

MacMillan Bloedel is a financially strong company operating in a financially strong province. Our roots are in B.C.



In the Douglas-fir cross-section, left, you see 11 years of slow growth followed by 11 years of fast growth after the stand was thinned and fertilized. The Douglas-fir on the right is three years older, but it came from a stand that was not fertilized or thinned. Its diameter is 2½ inches smaller.

If you would like more information about MacMillan Bloedel's reforestation plans and policies, we'll be happy to send you some material. Write to MB REPORTS,

VANCOUVER (CP) — The lawyer for former Howard Hughes' aide John Meier said Thursday there is nothing preventing his client's extradition to the United States.

John Taylor said he was withdrawn an application in British Columbia Supreme Court for a writ of habeas corpus, thus removing all legal barriers to Meier's extradition to Utah on charges of obstructing justice.

Meier now is being held at the Lower Mainland Regional Correctional Centre in nearby Burnaby.

Vessel Contract

OTTAWA (CP) — A $6.5-million contract has been awarded to R. S. L. Shipyards Ltd. of Vancouver for construction of a patrol vessel for fisheries enforcement off the Pacific coast.

The supply and services department said the 37.8-metre vessel will be driven by twin diesel engines to achieve a speed of about 20 knots. It is to be completed within two years.

Tax Evasion

LANGLEY (CP) — Herbert W. Gilhooly, of Langley, was fined $7,105 Wednesday after pleading guilty in provincial court to tax evasion.

Gilhooly admitted that he earned $55,724 between Dec. 31, 1973 and May 1, 1976 in commissions from the sale of steel to the United States.

The fine was one-third of the tax payable by Gilhooly for 1974 and 1975.

Four More Months

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Peter Spinelli, 20, was sentenced today to four months in jail after being found guilty of trying to escape from the Kamloops correctional centre March 24.

Provincial court Judge Bill Diebolt said the sentence was lenient considering a guard was assaulted and locked in a cell during the unsuccessful escape attempt.

Earlier, Raymond Heisler was given four months for the attempted breakout. A third man charged, Richard Sharp, has not been tried yet.

Cruel to Pigeons

VANCOUVER (CP) — A man who fed drain cleaner to pigeons was sentenced in provincial court Thursday to three months in jail for cruelty to animals.

Duncan Johnson Barker, 39, of Vancouver, was also put on probation for nine months.

Barker's lawyer said there was no indication any of the birds died.

7 Charged in Endako Violence

FRASER LAKE (CP) — Seven persons have been charged with assault causing bodily harm and causing wilful damage over $50 in an incident at the Endako molybdenum mine, RCMP said Thursday.

Police said the charges stem from an incident March 26 in which four trucks carrying molybdenum from the mine were hit with rocks, causing damage of about $1,500, and drivers were injured by broken glass.

About 500 members of the Canadian Association of Industrial, Mechanical and Allied Workers have been on strike against Placer Development Ltd., which owns the mine, since Feb. 14. Placer has been shipping molybdenum, used in the manufacture of steel, during the strike.

RCMP said names of those charged were not released because they had not been served documents relating to the charges. Five of the seven accused were members of CAIMAW.

Meanwhile, the mine was still without electricity today after three power poles were cut down on Sunday.

Company spokesman Mel Thompson said B.C. Hydro was trying to get a hearing before the B.C. Labor Relations Board to have pickets removed so Hydro workers could repair the line.

However, a spokesman for the union representing Hydro workers said even if an injunction was granted, his members would be advised not to repair the line.

After the Wounds, a Soothing Victory

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

A month ago the New Democrats were a divided party in Esquimalt-Port Renfrew, but Thursday night the party workers cheered together for Frank Mitchell — the man they'd united to elect.

For Mitchell, a veteran Esquimalt police sergeant, it was a sweet victory over Socred Lyle Kahl who'd edged him by 121 votes in 1975. And it meant a return to the legislature where he last sat for a brief spell in 1952.

Over-all it was a triumph for the NDP's riding organizers because the party had split badly in late March when the nomination battle between Mitchell and hopeful John Brewin erupted into open warfare.

A one-vote victory gave Mitchell the nod, but Brewin supporters protested and called on the party's provincial executive to nullify the ballot. They later withdrew that request.

But all those wounds were healed when Mitchell claimed Esquimalt-Port Renfrew for the NDP with a substantial margin.

In his victory speech, delivered from atop a table in the Boilermakers Hall on Esquimalt Road, Mitchell praised party workers for forgetting their differences and closing ranks against the Socreds.

He had special thanks for Brewin, saying his former opponent's work in Sooke had swung that key poll.

"I want to thank you for all the work you did. You put it (Sooke) together and won it," Mitchell later told Brewin on the phone.

Toasting the boisterous crowd with Cordon Rouge in a plastic cup, Mitchell said: "We, the people of this riding won this election because we worked like hell."

Later, in a more subdued address, Mitchell said: "There were a lot of disagreements. We got to points where we hated each other . . . but we got it together and when you get this far it sure feels good."

Mitchell's election marks the first time in 28 years that the riding has elected an opposition member. But the poll results came as small surprise to the party faithful. They jammed into the hall, sipped beer, and watched calmly as Mitchell forged ahead. Early in the evening it was obvious they had a winner and the television-watching crowd saved its wild cheers for the Victoria race where Charles Barber and Gordon Hanson were scoring an NDP sweep.

Things went a little crazy at about 10:30 when Mitchell marched into the hall, his arms aloft. He was mobbed and lifted on to a table along with key party organizers.

Mitchell told the crowd the fight had just begun. He said for the next three years NDP supporters should work to consolidate the party's hold on the riding and that the next time around he wanted to be sitting with an NDP government.

A short time later Kahl arrived at the hall. There were a few whistles of derision as he pushed his way through the crowd towards Mitchell, but mostly he met with handshakes and slaps on the back.

He congratulated Mitchell. The two men stood with their hands clasped for a few minutes, Mitchell leaning close to hear Kahl whose laryngitis-hit voice could barely be heard in the commotion. Then the defeated MLA slipped away and headed for retirement.

He said he planned to do some fishing with his two sons, but hadn't thought further ahead than that.

He admitted some shock.

"I was more surprised than I was disappointed," he said. "There were a large number of people in the constituency that I was counting on but . . . well, we'll just have to take a look at the polls and see what went wrong."

In an interview Mitchell said he thought the difference was that the NDP workers had put out more.

The New Democrats had a campaign task force of 600 "and when you get that many people pulling in the same direction you can't help but win."

Sweet kiss, delicious win for Curtis

He'll Drink to That!

Water Line Helped Curtis Douse Mika Bid

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

He was drinking coffee, his ecstatic campaign workers were swigging rye or beer but for Hugh Curtis Thursday night the magic potion was water — cool, clear, Sooke Lake water.

As Curtis held his Saanich-The Islands seat for Social Credit, the NDP's John Mika attributed the win largely to Curtis's prime-mover role in providing a piped water supply to the often-parched Saanich Peninsula.

"Peninsula water (the piped extension from the Greater Victoria water system) was his ace card," Mika told a dejected supporter.

It was an opinion shared by most people, including Curtis himself, and confirmed by the results.

Mika generally fared well in the southern, more populous part of the sprawling riding and gave Curtis a close fight in a number of Gulf Island areas. But voters in the peninsula communities turned out in heavy numbers for the man who, more than any other, had assured an end to their reliance on uncertain well supplies.

In the quiet, sombre group at Mika's campaign office on McKenzie, the party's 1975 candidate summed it up.

As Carol Pickup stared at the individual poll results on the big board she mused aloud: "If only we could have cut off Saanich-The Islands at Royal Oak we would have done very nicely . . ."

As it was, Mika, the Saanich alderman and former newspaperman, succeeded in almost halving the 4,000-vote gap that separated Curtis and Pickup in the 1975 provincial election.

In his headquarters exactly a mile away on Douglas, Curtis conceded that this, his 10th election in a 17-year career in municipal and provincial politics, was a tough battle.

And he readily agreed that the water line helped him enormously.

"The single most important issue in the 1975 election was the uncertainty of water supply on the peninsula," he recalled. "We started in January, 1976, to work on that — it should have been done 30 years ago."

Curtis was given a riotous reception when he arrived at about 9:40 p.m. Heading the welcoming committee were his wife Sheila and three children — Gary, 21, Dave, 17 and Sue, 15.

After engaging in a head-tousling fight with his bushy-haired sons, Curtis quipped: "When you've got as little hair as I have you can't tell them to get haircuts."

Mika phoned to concede defeat shortly after 10. In thanking his campaign workers, Curtis predicted that the Socreds' reduced majority would ensure for B.C. "a very good legislature."

At one point deafening cheers interrupted his comments, as a television announcer said Curtis's cabinet colleague Bill Vander Zalm was leading the race in Surrey.

"That's good news," Curtis said, "but I will continue to disagree with him on certain things."

Unlike his obviously depressed supporters, Mika appeared to take his defeat fairly philosophically.

"I expected all along we would more or less split Saanich itself and the southern part of the riding, that we'd have the edge on the islands and it would be decided on the peninsula," he said.

Mika also said Curtis had the benefit of some useful pre-election "ink" with announcements about the purchase of additional acreage on Sidney Island and his intention to ask for the dismissal of some Human Rights Commission members.

But he said he took some satisfaction from the fact that the NDP had done better in Saanich-The Islands than ever before.

His wife, Peggy, entered the headquarters a little after 9 o'clock, after travelling from a Vancouver convention where she is running for president of the Registered Nurses Association of B.C.

"We came close, honey, but we didn't make it," Mika told her.

Meanwhile, the third candidate, Conservative John Green, was left out in the cold with little more than 2,300 votes.

Green said he was expecting less polarization in this election, not more.

His closing prediction: "The present situation makes it inevitable that we will have, at some point down the road, a large NDP majority whenever the voters are of a mind to dispose of the present government."

Smith Scores Easy Win As Tory Chief Runs Last

By MIKE HUGHES
Times Staff

Conservative leader Vic Stephens was unceremoniously dumped by Oak Bay-Gordon Head voters in Thursday's election as Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith chalked up a resounding win for the Socreds.

Most pundits had predicted a close fight, but Smith, a 44-year-old lawyer, ran away with it, getting more than twice as many votes as Stephens.

The other surprise in the riding was the success of Muriel Overgaard, the NDP candidate who came in second, more than 400 votes ahead of the Tory leader.

The final results were: Smith, 12,551; Overgaard, 6,577; Stephens, 6,165.

Stephens told a crowd of about 65 party supporters he was surprised by the outcome but that it isn't the end of his political career nor does it mark the demise of the Conservative party in B.C.

"Let's stay in there," he urged.

The 48-year-old lawyer appeared shaken by the results and said he and his party were tossed out because of a trend toward polarized politics in B.C.

"The people of B.C. are not prepared to accept the Progressive, Conservatives under my leadership."

Over at the Smith headquarters it was all jubilation as party organizers were pleasantly surprised at the success of their candidate.

Smith told a happy, celebrating crowd of about 200 that "this is a great evening for us."

In an interview, he said there were no doubt a number of factors which contributed to his victory including his record as mayor for the past four years and alderman before that.

"People wanted to elect somebody that is sensitive to the community," he said.

"Maybe they felt more comfortable with me."

Smith also praised the more than 400 people who worked on his campaign and said their efforts plus the fact that he was able to meet a lot of people personally helped him turn turn things around.

Overgaard, a secretary at Cedar Hill junior secondary school, said she felt very satisfied with the results.

She said she felt during her canvas of the riding that people were supporting her because she focussed on the issues more than the Tories and Socreds.

She expressed surprise that Stephens didn't do better.

Since 1969, Oak Bay had gone more or less solidly Social Credit or Tory under Scott Wallace.

But in the March, 1978, byelection, when Stephens was first elected MLA, that trend appeared to be changing with the NDP picking up a larger percentage of the vote and that pattern was maintained in Thursday's election.

Stephens said he was convinced B.C. voters would reverse the trend to polarized politics this time and vote for a third-party.

"Instead the situation is more polarized than ever."

Stephens said it is not his style to quit.

"I'm going to stay in there and fight," he said, adding that there might be a byelection down the road somewhere and he would be prepared to run again.

Some observers felt Stephens lost the vote of a number of staunch party supporters when he accused the federal Tories of making "secret deals" with the Socreds.

But the Tory leader said he didn't regret what he did. "If I'm going to lose it is going to be on my own terms."

Smith said during the campaign that if he won he would step down as mayor when his term runs out in November and also quit his law practice. He also promised to set up a constituency office in the riding.

Before the Judge

A 42-year-old man who pleaded guilty in provincial court Thursday to indecently assaulting a five-year-old girl was remanded by Judge William Ostler until Monday for sentencing.

William Edward Elshaw, 2310 Wark, elected trial by magistrate and entered the plea without being represented by a lawyer.

Crown counsel Richard Law told the court Elshaw befriended the young girl shortly before 7 p.m. Wednesday at Central Park, offered her ice cream to entice her to go to his apartment, and performed the indecent act at his residence before returning to the park with her.

Law said the girl led city police back to the apartment where he was arrested.

Law also stated that Elshaw was on probation for a related offence at the time. Elshaw was convicted Jan. 31 this year of an indecent assault on a seven-year-old and was given a one-year prison term and placed on two years' probation. Elshaw said he was released from jail in October.

Elshaw was also convicted Feb. 23, 1972, in Valleyfield, Que. of indecent assault and was given a four-year jail term on that occasion, was convicted Aug. 7, 1969, in Valleyfield of attempting to have sexual relations with a female under 14 and was jailed two years, and was convicted May 16, 1962, in Campbell River of abducting a female and was sentenced to two years.

Ostler granted Law's application for a delay in sentencing for the purpose of having his probation officer available to testify and for any psychiatric reports which may be available.

A third person was charged in connection with the holdup and beating of a 24-year-old man Wednesday.

Donald Robinson, also known as Allen Asapace, of no fixed address, was charged with robbery with violence.

The 22-year-old elected trial by judge without jury and was remanded until today for a possible bail hearing.

On Wednesday, 25-year-old Roderick Dale Callihoo, 506 Pendray, and 28-year-old Brenda Joy McKenzie, 945 Esquimalt, were charged with the same offence in connection with the holdup and beating of Edward Anthony Kubica.

They were released on their own undertaking and remanded to next Wednesday for election of their trial method.

A former Victoria resident was given a one-day jail sentence and fined $300 after pleading guilty to possession of hashish.

Leslie Brough, now living in Fort Saskatchewan, Alta., was originally charged with possession of hashish for the purpose of trafficking but pleaded guilty to the include offence of simple possession.

Crown counsel Edward De Walle said Brough was stopped by police on Dec. 8 as he was entering a house at 2072 Chaucer and two ounces of hashish were found in his jacket pocket.

A man serving nine months for forgery had another month added to his sentence on a false pretences charge.

Benjamin Frank Vorel pleaded guilty to the Feb. 8 charge brought in from Dawson Creek where he purchased some auto parts and paid with a $262.50 bad cheque.

A youth who told Ostler he liked living in "the streets" was given a suspended sentence, six months' probation and 75 hours of community service work for fraudulently obtaining food and lodgings worth $250 from the Crest Harbourview Inn, 455 Belleville.

Crown counsel Nicholas Lang said Stephen Maddock, no fixed address, stayed at the motel from April 30 to May 2 before skipping out on the bill.

Ostler also ordered Maddock to repay the motel within four months.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Clayton Mitchell Heeks, 21, of Edmonton, $600; Hugh Harold Dye, 27, of 2275 Millstream, $500; and Donald Michael Smith, 17, of 1128 Verdier, $350.

Encouraging Start Reported On Gathering Ocean Data

The gathering of ocean research data courtesy of private shipping is off to a good start, says oceanographer Gary Borstad.

The experimental program was launched last month on behalf of the Institute of Ocean Sciences, using a regular west coast route plied twice monthly by the deepsea towboat Rivtow Viking, of Rivtow Straits Towing Ltd.

Borstad is in charge of the ships of opportunity experiment to determine the effectiveness of sampling physical ocean properties along a fixed course and over a long period.

The department of environment and fisheries is considering the method to replace special purpose field projects of research ships which are costly to operate.

The towboat carries a $10,000 instrument package monitored by an oceanographic technician accompanying the ship. Borstad said samples were taken at 30-40 places during the 36-hour run from Howe Sound to Tahsis via Juan de Fuca Strait.

Data extracted so far is satisfactory and analysis has begun.

Seven more round trips are scheduled in the evaluation contract supported by federal research funding.

'Sentence Excessive'

A four-month jail sentence imposed in provincial court was reduced in Victoria county court Thursday to a week spent in custody because rehabilitation is worth more than incarceration.

That was the view taken by Judge Leslie Cashman hearing an appeal by Bruce William Mooring, 20, who was convicted Dec. 14 by Judge Blake Allen for possession of stolen property under $200 value.

Mooring had pleaded guilty after he was arrested last June 28 wearing a jacket containing keys which had been reported stolen a week earlier.

Cashman said he disliked being critical of the lower courts, but he found little reason for the penalty other than an awareness by the accused that the jacket and keys belonged to someone else.

"I consider the sentence to be excessive indeed," Cashman said, and found from pre-sentence reports a substantial effort by Mooring to rehabilitate himself.

Mooring spent a week in custody before being released on bail pending the appeal. Cashman sentenced him to the time spent in jail plus six months probation.

Feds 'In the Dark' On Indian Blockade

A federal Indian affairs spokesman said today he is "in the dark" about an internal dispute between members of the Tsawout Indian band which resulted in a blockade of Mount Newton Crossroad leading to a KOA campground.

Nanaimo Indian affairs spokesman George Porteous said a member of the department met Thursday with band representatives and members of the Pelkey family, who began the blockade Monday night.

It was the second meeting this week, Porteous said.

The first meeting, held Wednesday, was described as unsatisfactory by a member of the Pelkey family.

Porteous said he expects to have a complete report by Monday.

The Pelkeys want the band to pay them for a section of the road which crosses their land and also to return to them land near the campsite which the Pelkeys say is theirs.

According to a family member there are 32 acres involved.

The owner of the KOA campsite leases the land from the band. Band spokesman Lou Claxton was not available for comment.

RCMP say the are not getting involved at this point because it is an internal band matter.

Dowell To Run For Mayor

Oak Bay alderman Shirley Dowell announced today she will run for mayor in the November election.

Mayor Brian Smith said earlier he will resign because of his election to the legislature.

Dowell has served on council for nine consecutive years and has been a regional director for three consecutive years.

She first decided to run for council in 1969 when she organized the University Ratepayers Association and took Oak Bay to court when the council of that day were considering building highrises on the Victoria Riding Academy site.

Victorians Buy Bird's Eye

The Maple Bay Marina at Bird's Eye Cove, which has been in receivership since 1976, has been bought by four Victoria businessmen for $610,000.

The new company is called Anchor Ventures.

One of the partners, Reg Mooney, said today the company took over the marina and shipyard on a two-year lease option.

It was formerly operated by the Bentzen brothers — John, Arnie and Leif — who blamed their financial problems on two poor boating seasons coupled with expansion costs.

The new manager of the marina is Cam Dickson.

Mooney said the company is planning several changes to save time for boaters. Conversion of the store to self-serve is one of them.

Boathouses are being built in the older section of the marina and there are already six boaters on the waiting list. The old wharves have been repaired.

Mooney said updating of electrical and water facilities in the new section has started.

The shipyard will remain but not on the large scale of the Bentzen days, providing bottom-painting sand other maintenace services.

Anchor Ventures intends to provide a series of demonstrations on such things as how to clean and cook fish and is planning other activities.

On May 19 and 20 there will be a shop and swap weekend.

There will also be a marine-wear fashion show on the two days.

On July 1 there will be a waterside barbecue, plus a live band.

EMOTIONAL OVERTIME WIN OVER BRUINS

Canadiens Rally From The Brink

JUBILATION DAWNS on face of Yvon Lambert of Montreal Canadiens (centre) after firing winning goal in overtime to give Canadiens a 5-4 victory over visiting Boston Bruins in seventh and deciding game of National Hockey League's Stanley Cup semi-final series. Brad Park of Bruins desperately tries to block shot as goaltender Gilles Gilbert goes down. (CP Wirephoto).

MONTREAL (CP) — Yvon Lambert, the burly Montreal Canadiens left winger, stationed himself in front of the Boston Bruins' net, took a pass from Mario Tremblay "right on the blade of my stick" and made no mistake.

Lambert poked the puck under Boston goalie Gilles Gilbert at 9:33 of overtime Thursday night to give the Canadiens a 5-4 victory in the decisive seventh game of their National Hockey League semi-final series, as the Canadiens rallied from the brink of defeat to move a step closer to a fourth consecutive Stanley Cup victory.

"I knew Mario was going wide and would pass to me," said Lambert, who stood to Gilbert's right as right winger Tremblay wheeled from his corner of the rink and fired the puck across the goalmouth.

"We did the same play about 45 seconds earlier, and I just missed a goal," said Lambert, whose third goal of the playoffs sent the Canadiens against New York Rangers in a best-of-seven series.

The final is scheduled to start Sunday at 1:05 p.m. PDT.

Jacques Lemaire, Mark Napier, Guy Lapointe and Guy Lafleur — whose eighth playoff goal, with 1:14 left in regulation time, forced the extra session — had the earlier Montreal goals. Wayne Cashman and Rick Middleton scored two goals each for Boston against Canadiens goalie Ken Dryden.

Lambert's winner capped an evening of emotional turmoil for 17,453 Forum fans. They saw the Canadiens fall behind 3-1 through two periods, then watched as coach Scotty Bowman's charges roared back to tie it 3-3 on Napier's goal on a perfect set-up by Lafleur and a power-play score by Lapointe after Boston's Dick Redmond was assessed a hooking penalty.

But the drama was far from over. Middleton stuffed the puck into the Canadiens goal with 3:59 left in the third period, and referee Bob Myers caught the Bruins with too many men on the ice with 2:34 showing on the clock. It proved to be the worst penalty the Bruins took in their 1978-79 season.

Lafleur's power-play goal brought the Canadiens back to 4-4 and set up the overtime, when the Canadiens outshot Boston 8-3, missing several excellent scoring chances. Montreal had an over-all margin of 52-30 in shots on goal.

"I know what was running through my mind — it was the possibility that if we didn't get out there and start working our butts off, it was going to be an early summer," said Canadiens defenceman Larry Robinson of the team's thinking after two periods.

"I just came to the conclusion that I wasn't ready for summer yet. All the guys came through big for us, and that's what it's all about."

The Canadiens got gutsy performances from centre Doug Risebrough, playing with a cage protecting his face after suffering a broken nose in a fight with the Bruins' Terry O'Reilly in the fifth game here last Saturday night, and from winger Rejean Houle, returning after an extended layoff with a bad groin injury.

"At this stage, you can't have any excuses for what you've done in the past," said Risebrough. "You've just got to go out there and play the best game you can against them."

But Montreal lost Lapointe, who fell with stretched ligaments in his left knee late in the game and was taken from the ice on a stretcher and then to hospital. His status for the start of the final was not known.

"For the Bruins, it was a bitter end to a third annual playoff series against Montreal. The Bruins lost the 1977 final in four consecutive games and dropped the 1978 final in six games. This year, they took Montreal into overtime in the seventh game of a series that saw the home team win every game.

"I don't know — there's a lot of talk about rinks, but I don't know," said a spent Cashman, the Boston captain who checked in and out of hospital last week between playing home games.

"Every time we get a lead here, we get a couple of penalties and they come back. I just don't know, I've got nothing to say about it. They beat us in overtime, that's all."

Race Dispute Hits Low

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The bitter dispute between the two rival sanctioning bodies of Indianapolis car racing sunk to new depths Thursday when the president of the United States Auto Club announced his resignation.

Dick King said somebody — he suspects the Championship Auto Racing Teams group — dug up a criminal conviction in his background and leaked it to the media "to discredit me and put pressure on me."

King, a respected official with the club for seven years, was 26 and a bookkeeper for a Niagara Falls, N.Y., auto dealership in 1957 when irregularities surfaced in the auto loans department. Sources said King took the rap for two higher-ups, never expecting a jail term. He served nine months before earning an early release.

Wheat Kings Come Back After Break

MONTREAL (CP) — There's nothing like a day of rest to alter the Memorial Cup fortunes of Brandon Wheat Kings, champions of the Western Hockey League.

Winless after two starts in the double round-robin series, the Wheat Kings got a welcome break in the schedule Wednesday night and parlayed the brief vacation into a 6-1 victory over Trois-Rivieres Draveurs, representing the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League, on Thursday.

Laurie Boschman's pair of goals in the space of 15 seconds during the first period sent Brandon winging to the series' most lopsided triumph, avenging a 4-1 loss to the Draveurs on Monday night.

Brian Propp, Dave Stewart, Ray Allison, and Darren Gusdale completed the Brandon rout, while Gaston Douville averted a shutout for the Draveurs, whose Cup record dropped to 2-2.

Peterborough Petes of the Ontario Major Junior Hockey League are 2-1 and they face Brandon in the conclusion of round-robin play at Verdun tonight.

A Brandon victory will ensure the Wheat Kings a berth in Sunday's final at the Montreal Forum, while a Petes defeat would tie them with Trois-Rivieres. The team with the highest difference between goals scored and goals allowed in the series would then reach the final.

The Wheat Kings looked every bit like a Memorial Cup finalist against the Draveurs as they skated relentlessly on rested legs, outshooting the Quebec club 45-31.

"Up until tonight's game, we had played only one good period out of six," said Brandon coach Dunc McCallum. "I couldn't figure out why, but I finally decided it was because the kids were tired.

"I hope our owners and our league can realize just how tiring it really is, coming here just after travelling thousands of miles in our own final against Portland.

"With that day off, though, it gave the guys a little bit more spring in their legs," he added.

There was a definite buoyancy to the Boschman-Allison-Propp line, as it accounted for four of the Brandon goals.

"I think the key to our line is skating," said Boschman. "When all three of us are skating we know where each of us is going to be. I happened to be in the right place at the right time on both my goals.

"I don't think we were ready when we played Trois-Rivieres the first time," he added. "We seemed to lack motivation but we were determined from the start tonight."

Andy Displaying Signs of Recovery

By Associated Press

For Andy Messersmith, all the numbers were wrong. The earned-run average was far too high, the batting average a flat zero.

Then New York Mets showed up.

Messersmith, in his second tour with Los Angeles, hadn't pitched a complete game in two years or a shutout in three. He was working on both Thursday, until Lee Mazzilli pounced on a fat sixth-inning fastball for a home run.

After the seventh, Messersmith was gone — but only for safety's sake. His numbers were impressive: six hits allowed and four strikeouts chalked up on the mound and a pair of hits, including a two-run double, at the plate.

And the most impressive number was the score: Los Angeles 14, New York 1.

In other National League games, Montreal Expos beat San Francisco Giants 3-0, Philadelphia Phillies edged San Diego Padres 3-2, St. Louis Cardinals beat Houston Astros 3-1, and, in a game suspended after nine innings, Cincinnati Reds and Chicago Cubs were tied, 7-7.

Meanwhile in the American League, Jerry Narron found himself catching one of baseball's top pitchers — Tommy John — in his first major league start and the New York rookie receiver knew who the boss was.

Narron, given the start when regular catcher Thurman Munson took a turn as designated hitter, had the good sense to let the crafty John, a 17-veteran of 457 major league games, do his thing, and the result was an artful seven-hitter as the Yankees beat Seattle Mariners, 8-1. The unbeaten John became the major leagues' first seven-game winner.

"I let John call most of the game," said Narron. "It's not hard for any catcher to catch Tommy John."

In other American League games, Cleveland Indians beat Milwaukee Brewers 8-1, California Angels defeated Boston Red Sox 5-3, Baltimore Orioles downed Oakland A's 3-1 and Chicago White Sox defeated Kansas City Royals, 5-2.

"I was very, very pleased and impressed with Andy," Dodgers' manager Tom Lasorda said of his right-hander, trying to make a comeback after suffering arm problems and a seriously separated shoulder during 1978's spring training.

"We're not going to take any chances with him 'cause of his arm," Lasorda said. "We feel that it's getting stronger and stronger. We talked it over with him and figured it was best to get him out of there after seven."

Choicest Salmon Fishing Around End of Island

Salmon fishermen should stick to the southern end of Vancouver Island this weekend.

Westerly winds have kept most fishermen off the water at Sooke in the past little while but chinooks to 27 pounds were biting at the weekend.

Larry Goodson came up with the top catch among an improving return Wednesday off Becher Bay. Goodson boated three chinooks weighing 31, 10 and six pounds while trolling with strip off Beechey Head

Strip has been the top producer and other noteworthy catches have been boated off Church Island and Aldridge Point

A fresh run of chinooks in the 10 to 18 pound range moved into Pedder Bay the same day and fishermen have been nailing them on silver harvest octopus (either white or black and white) trolled close to the bottom right inside the bay.

Oak Bay fishermen are landing chinooks to 20 pounds right off the marina breakwater by casting with drift-fishing lures or trolling with minnows. Other good catches were noted from Chain Flats, off Discovery Island and in The Gap.

Action has picked up off Sidney, where Oliver Salvador topped catches with a 22-pounder landed Monday on strip near Coal Island. Chinooks to 20 pounds are also being landed near the James Island powder wharf on Stingsildas.

Deep Cove fishing is excellent with chinooks to 18 pounds turning up off Wain Rock, Moses Point and Coles Point on Krippled-Ks, strip or white hootchies trolled fairly deep.

Henderson Point, Willis Point and Tod Inlet waters are yielding a slower catch of chinooks to 12 pounds along with a few bluebacks for those using bait, 250 feet of wire line and a planer.

In Finlayson Arm, the seals and sea lions appear to be moving out and chinooks to 15 pounds are coming in from all depths and gear trolled near Goldstream Island, Chesterfield Rock and Misery Bay.

Further up-Island, Porlier Pass is producing fair catches of small chinooks.

Nanaimo fishermen are starting to find the going a little difficult. There's fair numbers of blues available just about everywhere around Five Fingers Island, Snake Island and Northwest Bay but the only chinooks (averaging four pounds) are being dragged up from 50 to 55 fathoms in depth by commercial gear.

The only bright spot around the mouth of Alberni Inlet at the moment is Bamfield, where a few small chinooks have been landed.

Courtenay fishermen are tying into blues near Bates Beach and along the Powell River side of the Strait of Georgia.

Chinooks to 12 pounds are showing among the more numerous blues off Big Rock, Cape Mudge and through Discovery Passage. Deeply-trolled strip has worked best.

Trout anglers on the southern end of the Island are connecting in Bear, Cowichan, Somenos and Shawnigan lakes.

Great Central Lake has yielded several cutthroat in the five pound bracket in recent days and action has started to pick up in the lower-elevation lakes around Courtenay and Campbell River.

"Great checkup! Have some candy."

Sisters Smith Pace Stingers

Della and Kristy Smith came up with a sisterly hitting act Thursday to lead Strathcona Stingers to an 8-3 victory over Esquimalt Combos in a Victoria Senior Women's Softball League game at Hyacinth Park.

In the other game, Butler Bros. tripped Capital City Pirates, 4-0.

Della, who drove in two runs, and Kristy each smashed a pair of hits.

Mavis Underwood led the Butler victory by pitching a four-hitter.

In Heywood Men's League play, Dwayne Robinson and Bob Lougheed each cracked a home run to lead Victoria Athletics to a 4-2 win over Brentwood Merchants at Heywood Avenue Park.

At Central Park, Juan de Fuca Merchants had to forfeit a Stuffy McGinnis Men's League game to Elks-Athletics after failing to include pitcher Len Carolan on their pre-game players' list.

Carolan came on in relief with Juan de Fuca ahead 3-2 in the fifth inning, Elks-Athletics protested and verdict was handed down,

Nelson Leads Nelson When Rain Halts Play

DALLAS (AP) — Tom Watson, in search of his third tournament victory of the year, was one par away from the lead entering today's second round of the $300,000 Byron Nelson golf tournament.

Rain halted the first round Thursday with 39 players, including Watson, still on the 6,993-yard Preston Trail layout.

Larry Nelson was in the clubhouse with a five-under-par 65, with George Burns at 66 and the trio of Brad Bryant, Lanny Wadkins and Morris Hatalsky at 67. Arnold Palmer was among a quartet at 68.

Watson, who won this tournament a year ago, was looking over a six-foot birdie putt at the par-three eighth hole when officials sounded the sirens.

His putt slid off to the side, and he took his par and headed in.

The last 13 groups were scheduled to finish their rounds before the start of today's second round.

Bob Gilder, playing in the second threesome behind Watson, was at four-under when the rain stopped the action. He was one over at the turn, but birdied the first, second, third, sixth and seventh to move into contention.

Dave Barr of Kelowna, B.C., the only Canadian entered, had a 36 on the front nine before the rain struck.

Nelson, like Watson, had a bogey-free round. He had birdies on the second, fifth, 11th, 15th and 17th holes.

Lions Sign Three

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Lions have announced the signing of three non-import wide-receivers to Canadian Football League contracts.

Berry Muis and Gary Metz are graduates of the University of British Columbia Thunderbirds, while Kevin Ayer is a graduate of St. Francis Xavier University.

Metz, a five-foot-11, 185 pounder who also punts and placekicks, was signed as a free agent, while Muis was the Lions' sixth-round selection in this year's Canadian collegiate draft.

Muis, a native of Holland, stands five-foot-11 and weighs 180 pounds.

Ayer, a six-foot-two, 195 pounder, was the Lions third-round pick in the draft.

Hanburger Dropped By Redskins

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chris Hanburger, an all-pro linebacker, has been released by Washington Redskins. Hanburger, a 14-year veteran who will be 38 when the 1979 season begins, apparently was caught in the Redskins' plans to go with youth, a strategy decided on last season after George Allen was fired as coach.

A Calendar of Yachting Classics

Local photographer Jim McVie has been snapping Swiftsure and other sailing events for 30 years and those who've seen his work compare it to that of Ken Beken of Cowes, who's known throughout Europe for his colorful calendars.

I've often wondered why Jim didn't get into the calendar business too and at last he has.

Next year is the 50th anniversary for Swiftsure and Jim has seven superb shots to mark the occasion, along with action-filled pictures of the Strait of Georgia classic, Maple Bay regatta and such popular classes as Thunderbirds, Cal 29s and Six-Metres.

The calendar is a Canadian product all the way, being published by Trivco Distributors with lithography by Lawson Graphics Pacific Ltd. of Richmond.

Jim will be having a display of his yachting pictures at the B.C. Maritime Museum, starting next Friday and going through to June 10. The calendar will also be there to show what local enterprise can do.

Between 20 and 30 boats are expected to take part in the fourth annual Gaffers Club Race, which starts in the vicinity of the Sidney government wharf at 11 a.m. Saturday. Depending on wind conditions, the course will be either around Forrest Island or Rum Island.

Owners of these character gaff-rigged boats don't take racing that seriously but this year have gone as fas as having a start gun and putting up prizes of "Nelson's Blood" for the first three boats. They've even graduated to a somewhat unorthodox handicap system.

Harvey Merritt says protests have been discouraged by protestors having to produce an offering of rum before their case is heard. As you can see, it's more of a fun thing than anything else and a chance for shorewatchers to see some pretty interesting boats.

Harvey is also slightly miffed at having to phone 11 provincial government departments before he could get the one responsible for putting in the floats at Sidney each year. He says he saw 47 boats milling around on the last long weekend, waiting to clear customs. Let's hope the floats are in for the Victoria Day weekend.

There'll be fun again on Sunday in the Sidney area when the Victoria Hobie Fleet holds a beach bash on Sidney Spit. They'll sail over from Tulista Park at 11 a.m., have a barbecue on the spit and spend the rest of the time in such activities as hull-flying contests and straight line racing.

Another event at Sidney on Sunday will be the Canoe Bay Sailing Club's 14-mile Sidney Island race, which gets under way 9:30 a.m. in the government wharf vicinity.

The club had its annual race to Bedwell Harbor and back last weekend with John Barker's Interlude winning top honors and Gordie Inglis' Water Mellon placing second. Tied for third spot were Cam Thomson's Cal-Lorri and Herb Roberts' Bijou a Moi. Next to them in the 31 boat-fleet came Bob Bentham's Dystocia, Barry Camp's Chantarelle and George Redzeich's Selga.

Royal Victoria Yacht Club sailors have a busy weekend coming up, starting with a race around Discovery Island, set for 1:30 p.m. on Saturday. A reverse handicap system will be used to, hopefully, have most of the boats going across the finish line fairly close together.

AROUND OUR SHORES

The annual overnight race to Crescent Rock and back will also be sailed on Saturday, the competitors getting their start gun at 5 p.m.

RVYC will have series racing again on Wednesday, starting at 6:30 p.m. Top Pacific Handicap Racing Fleet boat this week was Sherlock, crewed by Rick Townshend, Jennifer Charlesworth and Nick Thornton. Runners-up were Soren Isbrand's Danish Pastry and Ralph Smith's Finesse.

The first three Thunderbirds were Gary Cooney's Hocus, Bob Grundison's Owl and Dennis Robinson's Coco while the top Cal 20 skippers were Peter McKinnon, Ken Wilson and George Lewis.

The Turkey Head Sailing Association will also have series racing next week in waters off Oak Bay Marina, starting at 6:30 p.m. on Tuesday. The top three boats this week were Danish Pastry, Jack Foster's Sherlock and Larry Shorter's Kila Kila.

Early tomorrow morning 14 boats, all from Portland with the exception of the Canadian navy's ketch HMCS Oriole, will start a 200-mile race from Astoria to Victoria.

There'll be a PHRF division and an International Offshore Rule one. Aggression, which was top IOR boat last year will be back. If you remember, her owner was the one who lost a poker game, penalty for which was to buy Aggression — not such a bad penalty at that.

Jack and Gene's Pegasus, last year's PHRF winner will also be back. My husband George and I have more than a passing interest in Pegasus, both of us having sailed with Jack on the Columbia River with George helping to sail Pegasus between Victoria and Portland twice.

The sailing world has lost one of its most colorful and friendly characters in Les Alfreds, who founded the Jib Set in Vancouver in 1967, turning out 15,000 graduates since that time. It was Les who launched the Small Ships program for the Captain Cook Bicentennial, converting Sabot dinghies into brigantines.

It was standing room only for his memorial service on Saturday and a large armada made its way out to the first bell buoy in Vancouver harbor on Sunday when his ashes were committed to the deep.

It was a fitting end for a man who has inspired the love of sailing in so many people from all walks of life, helping them to competence and enjoyment. It is always sad to say goodbye to a friend and Les was one of the best.

Rockies Approach Creighton

DENVER, Colo. (AP) — General manager Ray Miron says Colorado Rockies of the National Hockey League have narrowed their list of candidates for a head coach to two or three.

Miron confirmed he had approached Fred Creighton, former coach with Atlanta Flames.

Others believed on the Rockies' list are Boston's Don Cherry and Fred Shero of New York Rangers.

Winning Jockey Gets Beating

BOSTON (AP) — Anthony P. Ciulla, 35, chief government witness in a million dollar race-fixing trial, says he saw his alleged partner in the scam smack a jockey who won a race he'd been paid to lose.

Testifying in U.S. district court, Ciulla said that Howard T. Winter, 49, a reputed organized-crime boss, hit Edward Donnally as an example to other jockeys in the alleged scheme that involved six race tracks in five East Coast states.

Having agreed to hold his horse back out of the money in the third race at Suffolk Downs on Oct. 16, 1974, Donnally won and then was told to meet with Winter at Danny's Cafe in nearby Somerville, Ciulla testified.

He then recounted the incident:

"Howie said to him, 'Do you realize you took my money and allowed your horse to run?'

"He (Donnally) came up with a flippy answer — something you just don't say to Howie.

"(William) Barnoski (currently a fugitive in the case) pulled out a blackjack and hit him (Donnally) in the face a couple of times and Howie smacked him a few times. Mr. Donnally then adopted a totally different attitude. He was apologizing and everything, offering to hold back horses for nothing."

Ciulla said Winter then warned Donnally that "he (Donnally) and his wife could go out the back door, be put in a trunk and never be missed."

He testified earlier in the week that his first contact with Winter came about after he bilked one of Winter's bookies in a horse race. He also told how the two pooled Winter's countrywide network of bookies and Ciulla's admitted race-fixing expertise to net winnings from the tracks.

The prosecution said the tracks involved included Suffolk Downs in Boston, Rockingham Park in New Hampshire, Lincoln Downs in Rhode Island, Pocono race track in Pennsylvania, and City race track and Garden State Park in New Jersey.

Winter is on trial along with eight other defendants, including jockeys, horse owners and night club managers from several states, accused of racketeering, sports bribery, wire fraud and interstate travel to commit bribery in a 51-count indictment.

Title Defence For Cuevas

CHICAGO (Reuter) — Jose (Pepino) Cuevas of Mexico will defend his World Boxing Association welterweight championship against Randy Shields of Los Angeles at the Amphitheatre June 2, promoter Ernie Terrell has announced.

Pacer Brings Record Price

NEW YORK (AP) — Sonsam, the champion two-year-old pacer of 1978, has been resyndicated for $6.3 million, making him the highest-priced harness horse of all time.

Sonsam, who has not yet started as a three-year-old, was syndicated last November for $3 million, the most ever paid for a two-year-old racehorse of any breed. In 1978, Sonsam recorded 14 victories and two seconds, in 17 starts, earning $246,134. His best time was 1:54 2-5, the year's second-fastest mile for a harness horse of any age

Contract Bridge ♠♥♦♣ B. Jay Becker

You are South and the bidding has gone:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	3 ♠	Pass

What would you bid now with each of the following four hands?

1. ♠J3 ♡AK853 ◇KQ74 ♣95
2. ♠Q84 ♡AQJ73 ◇AKJ6 ♣10
3. ♠— ♡KQ962 ◇AJ83 ♣AJ94
4. ♠KQ ♡KQJ94 ◇KQ75 ♣KJ

1. Four spades. You seldom raise partner with only two trumps, but it is surely proper in this case. Partner's jump-rebid of three spades is forcing and shows at least a six-card spade suit, for which the J-x are clearly adequate support. It would be wrong to rebid your hearts and suppress your spade support, and it would be positively unthinkable to bid three notrump without a club stopper.

2. Six spades. Up to this point, you've shown no values above a minimum opening bid, and it's high time to tell partner that you started with not only substantially more than a minimum bid but also with excellent spade support. There should be no doubt at all in your mind about making twelve tricks; the only real question is whether or not a grand slam can be made.

If you start on the basis that partner has six spades to the A-K and the ace of clubs, you are already on the verge of a grand slam. Any other features North may have, such as the king of hearts or queen of diamonds, are likely to generate 13 tricks. However, it's not certain that North has the A-K of spades and ace of clubs, so probably the best action is to go directly to six spades and hope that North has the appropriate values to bid seven.

Alternatively, you could use Blackwood instead, but you might run into complications later on that would prove difficult to resolve. The direct raise to six spades has the great advantage of allowing North to use his judgment on how far to go.

3. Three notrump. This violates the general principle that you should not bid notrump with a void in partner's suit, but the alternative bid of four clubs is even more unattractive. Partner is unlikely to have four clubs (since he has at least six spades), and three notrump may easily turn out to be the best contract.

4. Four notrump. This is an ideal type of hand for using Blackwood, because the number of aces North has will tell you precisely how many tricks can be made. If partner shows three aces, you bid six notrump; if he shows four aces, you bid seven notrump.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Saturday, May 12, 1979
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 19): What had been put off, delayed or postponed will suddenly come into sharp, clear focus. Outline goals, priorities. Accept added responsibility. Publish, communicate, advertise and promote — you have a lot to say and plenty of listeners.

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Monetary restriction is lifted. You have freedom to probe, experiment and to carry through on "pet plan." You can be rid of burden not rightly your own in first place. Emphasis on problems affecting partner, mate or other individual very close to you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): New approach results in greater independence of thought, action. But also be willing to listen, observe and learn from others. Accent on contracts, contacts, publicity, joint efforts and marital status. A Leo can show you the way.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Delay is temporary; there is no reason for panic. Follow through on hunch. One who aided you in past could make reappearance. An Aquarian helps resolve work or health problem. Build for security, select quality materials.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Popularity soars — those who represented opposition could suddenly become staunch supporters Travel, versatility, humor, ability to communicate — these are under bright, clear spotlight. Gemini, Sagittarius and the number 3 figure prominently.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Roadblocks, obstacles can be ultimately transformed into steppingstones towards goal. Know it, avoid brooding, gain second emotional wind. Aquarius, Scorpio, Taurus persons play key roles. Older family member has the facts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Change, travel, variety, special announcements, meaningful decision are featured. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons play significant roles. Be versatile, but avoid scattering your forces. Relative in transit makes special request.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Emphasis on money, earning capacity, obtaining needed material. Domestic area is highlighted. Be diplomatic, especially in dealing with family member. Discuss purchase of luxury item. Beautify surroundings.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can make correct decision at right time. Be direct, confident, make personal appearances and wear right colors. Trust your own judgment and intuition. A Pisces plays intriguing role.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You have more strength than might be obvious on surface. You need not be intimidated. Know it and act with confidence. You're due to strike pay dirt. What was hidden will be revealed — and you are beneficiary.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Your natural qualities of warmth, charm and innovative capabilities surge to forefront. The sky is the limit. Know it and act as if aware of it. You'll be in position to win friends and influence people.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): New approach aids in making room for yourself at more elevated position. Be independent, not arrogant. Professional superior gives you benefit of doubt. Get off sidelines and into the fray. Leo, Aquarius persons play key roles.

IF MAY 12 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are going through a peroid of self-discovery. Last year's domestic change and challenge left their marks. However, you are learning valuable lessons including the enjoyment of your own company. You perceive that being alone is not necessarily the same as being loney. October could be one of your most memorable months of 1979. Travel and romance are featured in July. Gemini, Saagittarius persons play important roles in your life. You are stubborn, sensuous, attractive, bright and you are very much aware of body image. Social life accelerates during latter part of this month. You will soon wipe clean slate of past errors.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

"It was a few years ago, but last time we met you had just started a fund to help put your three kids through college," said Keith. "It seemed a bit crazy, but are you still paying into it?"

Tom smiled. "Every year on my birthday," he replied. "I take the product of the ages of each pair of kids and then total the three products. That's the amount I deposit in dollars. This year it cost me just ninety nine dollars more than it did the year I started."

His children were evenly spaced, so how many payments had he made?

Rands, Mick In Island Final

Only one one thing is certain for the 36-hole Vancouver Island CFAX Open golf championship at Victoria Golf Club, Sunday.

Neither assistant professional Bruce Rands of Uplands nor amateur Dave Mick of Colwood will have a home-course advantage.

That should help make for an interesting final as otherwise they are well matched.

Rands was suprisingly strong in last week's quarter-final and semi-finals. He knocked off professional Bob Beauchemin 2 and 1 and then took care of Bob Hogarth of Royal Colwood, 2 up.

Mick, the defending champion, had just as tough a day. He was forced to the 19th before eliminating professional John Morgan and then squeaked by Ian Harper of Nanaimo, 1 up.

Veteran Lawrie Kerr of Royal Colwood will meet Bill Frith of Gorge Vale in the handicap final.

Starting times for the handicap final are 9 a.m. and 1 p.m. and for the open championship, 9:08 a.m. and 1:08 p.m.

WOMEN'S TOURNEY SET

DARTMOUTH, N.S. (CP) — The four-day second annual national women's lacrosse championship will be held here starting Aug. 8.

TORONTO (CP) — Bob Pulford will remain with Chicago Black Hawks as general manager, but will relinquish his coaching duties with the National Hockey League team to Eddie Johnston, Toronto lawyer Alan Eagleson confirmed Thursday.

Pulford held the dual role of general manager-coach with the Hawks last year, while Johnston coached the American Hockey League franchise in Moncton, N.B., jointly operated by Chicago and Toronto Maple Leafs.

Foyt Tops Practice At Indy

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) - Veteran A. J. Foyt came up with the top time for the second day in a row Thursday, hitting one lap at 194.890 miles an hour as practice heated up for Saturday's opening day of qualifications for the Indianapolis 500 auto race.

Earlier, a survey of 27 drivers showed they were predicting it would take an average four-lap speed of about 191 to win the pole.

That speed would be about 11 m.p.h. slower than the record of 202.156 set by Tom Sneva in 1978 when he won the pole for a second straight year.

Is Walton Laker-Bound?

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — "Portland has the rights to me until the season is over," Bill Walton says of his approaching free-agent status in the National Basketball Association.

The NBA's most valuable player in 1977-78 isn't letting any of the suspense go out of his plans for next season — when he returns to action after a year's injury layoff.

But the 6-foot-11 Walton can make plans to become an instant millionaire. The bidding for the former UCLA all-America and Portland Trail Blazer star could approach the $800,000-a-year contract level of such players as Denver's David Thompson and Pete Rose of baseball's Philadelphia Phillies.

"I would like to tell you where, but I really can't," Walton told a sportswriter's meeting Wednesday. "And I don't want anybody to get funny ieas when they see Bill Sharman (Los Angeles Lakers' general manager) and myself sitting here."

Walton said the fractured bone in his foot, injured in a playoff game in April, 1978, is healed and he plays about once a week at UCLA.

"I can play very well right now," Walton said. "It's a long way back but that's all behind me. . . . I'll definitely play as hard as I can to win the championship. I have all these personal honors and statistics but I want to have my fingers full of (championship) rings. I have one now (Portland 1977)."

Sharman, asked about what it would mean to the Lakers if Walton could be signed and join with five-time NBA most valuable player Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, said they would be "unstoppable."

Asked if there might be a problem of clashing egos, Sharman said: "Not with these two. They're both very humble people . . . very unselfish. They're both team players. They're both winners."

Walton has indicated in recent weeks he would prefer to join a Pacific Division team. He has been romanced by the Golden State Warriors and San Diego Clippers. But he also has indicated his harsh feelings about Portland have cooled. He even mentioned the possibility of playing for the Trail Blazers in this year's playoffs, in which Portland was eliminated by Phoenix.

OUR ECONOMY
SECOND TO NONE

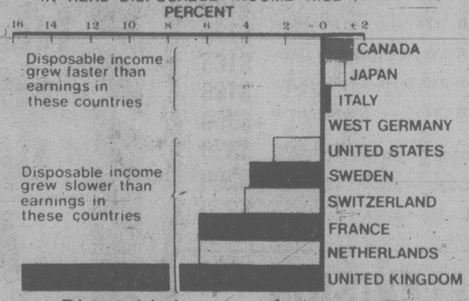
Canada has the strongest economic record of any industrialized nation during the '70s. Even during the difficult post-oil crisis years, 1974-1976, Canada's economy out-performed virtually all others in the Western World.

How do we know this?

By using the comparative studies compiled by the international OECD (Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development), we get an objective and unbiased picture of our economic record.

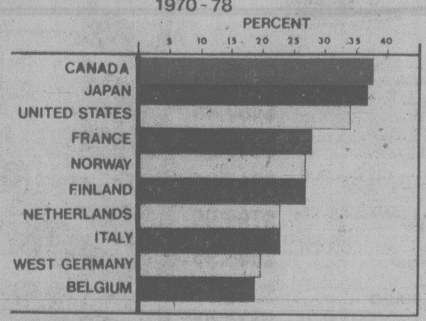
Whatever the economic indicators used—growth of income, job creation, industrial production, GNP etc.—Canada consistently ranks at or near the top.

REAL DISPOSABLE INCOME RISE
CANADA TOPS INDUSTRIALIZED WORLD IN REAL DISPOSABLE INCOME RISE (1972-1976)



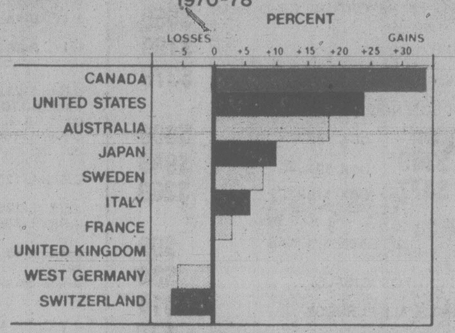
. Disposable income refers to gross earnings, minus inflation and taxes, plus cash transfers.
. The graph is based on the average production worker.

INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION % INCREASE 1970-78



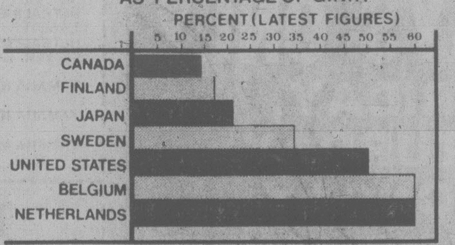
. All sectors of Canadian industry have shown strong growth during 1978.
. The steel, lumber, textile, shoe and pulp and paper industries are all operating at, or close to, full capacity.
. Capacity utilization in manufacturing increased to 89.4% during 1978.

RATE OF GROWTH IN EMPLOYMENT 1970-78



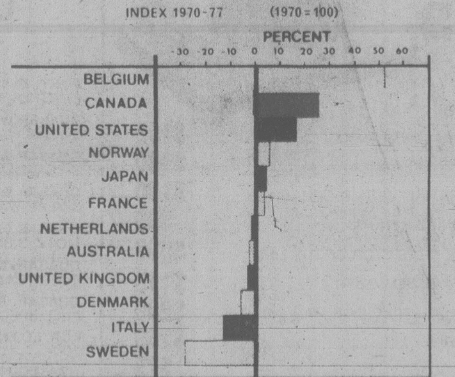
. Canada has consistently had the highest job creation rate among the OECD countries.
. For the period 1968-78 employment in Canada has grown by some three million—twice as fast as our population—attaining a record 477,000 for January 1978 to January 1979.

TOTAL NET NATIONAL DEBT AS PERCENTAGE OF G.N.P.



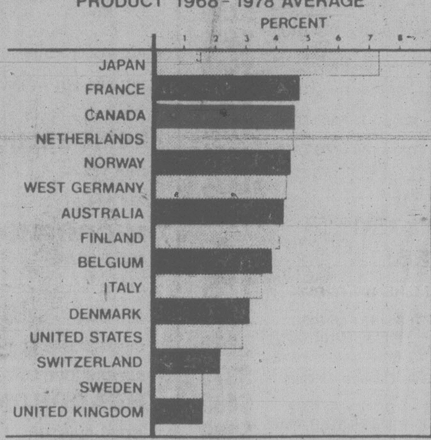
. The alternative to a federal deficit would be higher unemployment and lower transfer payments to people and provinces.

CHANGE IN HOUSING STARTS



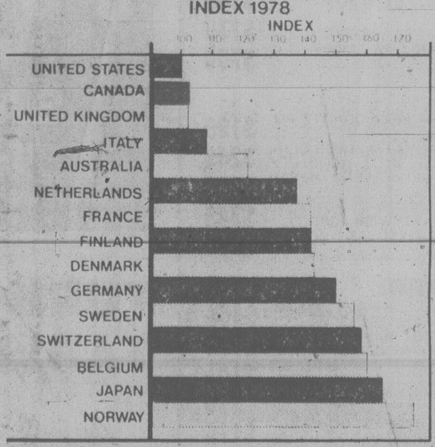
. Canadian housing costs are the second lowest in the world.
. A recent Gallup Poll showed 86% of Canadians satisfied with their housing, up from only 60% in 1968.

% RATE OF GROWTH OF REAL DOMESTIC PRODUCT 1968 - 1978 AVERAGE



. Domestic Product expresses the total value of goods and services produced in a country—minus the earnings of foreign investors and investments abroad.
. The term "real" denotes growth without counting inflation.

INTERNATIONAL COST OF LIVING INDEX 1978



. The U.S. government Statistics Report ranks Canada as the least expensive foreign posting for its diplomats.

The result
The average Canadian today
. has 50% more income;
. has two and a half times more in savings;
. earns 83% more in profits as a businessman;
. invests 62% more;
. has more money left after taxes;
. has a smaller net national debt;
. enjoys a much higher standard of living than ten years ago.

Tide, B.C.Reps In Tuneup Test

Crimson Tide, the Vancouver Island Rugby Union representative side, and B.C. Reps clash in an exhibition match Sunday which serves as an important warmup for both squads.

Each of the teams, who meet at 2 p.m. at UVic, face world-champion Bridgend of Wales next week.

The Tide faces Bridgend at 2:30 p.m. May 19 at Royal Athletic Park.

Provincial-champion James Bay Athletic Association placed seven players on the Tide while Oak Bay Wanderers and UVic Vikings have placed three players each and Cowichan has two reps.

Players selected are: Murray Allen, Chuck Shergold, Ron McGinnis, Ray Rogers, Mick Eckhart, Paul Mulholm and Gary Johnson of James Bay; Pinky Smith, Paul Monaghan and Denny Sinnot of Wanderers; Bevan Grant, Gary Grant and Jeff Reid of UVic; and Pat Simmons and Ted Zinkan of Cowichan.

Tall Hawk Joins Dinos

CALGARY (CP) — Fred Koepke, a six-foot eight-inch basketball all-star with Wilfrid Laurier University Golden Hawks, says he will play for University of Calgary Dinosaurs next season.

The 23-year-old centre says the fact that Norman Wagner, University of Calgary president, is his father-in-law had some bearing on his decision to transfer.

Lingerie for Fall Stresses Color

MONTREAL (CP) — The fall lingerie line by designer John Warden has a sophisticated look.

Richly colorful, the collection features warm burgundy, livened navy, deep rose and loden green.

The fabrics and patterns Warden has chosen are soft and flowing polyester jersey, styled loosely and sometimes quilted.

Arnel has been given a moire finish, tattersal patterns, bolder prints and chintz-like flowers.

Slim tunics top even slimmer pants, lace-shaped sleeves on slim sheaths and gold piping outlines jackers and robes.

Warden's line is available under the Molyclaire label in major Canadian department stores.

Bear Lovers Talk Teddies In Wiltshire

MONTREAL (CP) — When Mrs. Arthur Henderson boards a plane for England later this month, she will be clutching a large Teddy bear.

"It's my Longleat bear," she says, referring to the World Wide Teddy Bear Rally being held at Longleat in Wiltshire.

Mrs. Henderson says the Teddy bear movement is 75 years old.

"It gained momentum when a cartoon by Clifford Berryman appeared in the Washington Post showing the then American president, Theodore Roosevelt refusing to shoot a bear cub."

The society Good Bears of the World, started by Col. Bob Henderson of Edinburgh, has branches throughout Britain and the United States.

"Its object is to give a Teddy bear to every child in hospital," Mrs. Henderson says. The society's branches — members call them dens — believe in the bears' therapeutic value.

Teddy bears were first manufactured in the early 1900s by Walter Mitchum, president of the Ideal Toy Company in the U.S., and by Marguerite Stieff of Germany, a handicapped dressmaker who used leftover scraps of fabric to make stuffed animals.

"The reputation of Stieff bears is now worldwide," Mrs. Henderson says. "They're most expensive."

Mrs. Henderson herself makes Teddy bears as a hobby.

"The money I get for them goes to the World Wildlife Association or to St. Margaret's home (in Montreal) for the elderly."

Who can be expected to turn up for the Teddy bear rally at the end of May?

"Hundreds of Teddy Bear fans with thousands of bears," Mrs. Henderson says.

A flyer from Longleat to promote the event invites "bears of fame, modest bears, elderly bears, every self-respecting bear with its owner."

Youth Clinic

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel of experts: Saul Levine, psychiatrist; Marion Powell, medical doctor; Graham Cotter, clergyman; and Bruce Vichert, social worker. Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, B.C., V8W 2N4.

DEAR DR. COTTER: I am 18 years old and have a choice to make and find it difficult.

I have an attraction towards the priesthood, but I have never really been a church-goer and the last time I made my confession was when I made my first communion more than 10 years ago.

I suspect my sudden expression of faith and often question myself as to its sincerity. It is hard to judge myself.

I find it hard to talk to anyone, including my parish priest. I feel he might take it as an insult. What do you suggest I should do?

ANSWER: You may have a serious call to this ministry, in spite of not having been a regular communicant and penitent. It is not surprising that you are reluctant to discuss it with your parish priest, because he knows you only as you have been — a growing boy — and not as you begin to see yourself.

I suggest two things. First, that you should not set the priesthood as your goal for the immediate future. Instead, fix your mind on another occupation or calling by which you can make a living and also come to know more about life and about yourself.

Then you should concentrate on being a good Christian. No other vows you may take will ever be more important than those taken at your baptism, so you should find out what it means simply to follow Christ. To get help in doing this, and eventually in finding out whether you have a vocation to the priesthood, you should make the acquaintance, not of parish clergy, but of members of religious orders who live in your community. Try Basilians, Dominicans, Paulists or Jesuits, whichever are convenient to where you live.

DEAR MR. VICHERT: I am a 15-year-old girl in Grade 10 at school. My problem is a guy I like in Grade 12. I liked him last year and now this year I've got a mad crush on him. I would really love to meet him but I just don't know how to approach him.

My biggest problem is that I'm flunking every subject so far this year — when I usually get all A's — because all I do is think about him. Please help me.

ANSWER: If it is a choice between talking to the guy you like or flunking school I would suggest you take all the courage you have and talk to him.

Ask his advice about something, or what he thinks of particular courses that you might want to take next year, or anything.

You don't have too much to lose, since he doesn't know you now.

And even if it turns out he isn't interested in you, you will be better off. You will know how he feels and then you will be able to stop daydreaming about him.

Whatever happens, you will have to make a choice and I hope you decide not to flunk your year.

DEAR DR. POWELL: I am a 14-year-old girl and I have a problem with my boyfriend.

For the past year he has been taking pot and now he wants me to try some also.

He keeps telling me that pot doesn't do anything harmful to the brain. Is this true? Please help.

ANSWER: Your question is not about the effects of marijuana, or "pot", but really about your boyfriend. He should not be urging you to try it just because he uses it.

It probably does not do serious damage to the brain, but that is not a good reason for using it. Before we do anything there should be a good reason for doing it.

Sometimes we do things for fun or recreation or because we enjoy being with others sharing an activity. But before you take part in any activity you should be sure you want to and should know why.

Fourteen is a good age to begin making decisions about your life style. Do not do something you really do not want to do to make your boyfriend happy or to feel you are one of the crowd. The old saying still holds, "be true to yourself".

DEAR DR. LEVINE: I am 19 and my girlfriend is 16. The past few months she has been really worrying me. She gets very depressed — and suicidal, in my opinion.

We go to parties on weekends and sometimes during the party she appears with a cut finger or arm. She says it's from glass. I think she's done it on purpose.

I love her and I don't want her to hurt herself. Do you think I should confront her with my opinion and beg her to see a doctor, or should I leave her alone and hope it will wear off?

ANSWER: I am surprised that you have gone along with your girlfriend's behavior for these past few months without saying anything to her. I don't think you need to "confront" her, as you put it. What she needs is the opportunity to tell you, or someone, just what is troubling her.

Girls her age who frequently cut themselves in the manner which you describe are, in my experience, unhappy and confused — and they need help.

You say that she has really been worrying you. If that's the case then you should tell her exactly that. Express to her just how concerned you are, see if she'll "open up" and reveal her painful feelings to you. In all likelihood she will need a psychotherapist who works with adolescents.

If she refuses to talk to you or to seek help, then "confrontation" is a useful tactic. You may be able to do it alone, but you might also want to enlist the help of any close friends that she has, or her parents if they have a good relationship with her. Your worrying is justified — she is lucky that she has you to help her.

DEAR DR. COTTER: I am a 17-year-old girl. I was going with this guy for three months. Then we broke up because I felt guilty about petting with him. I know we want to go back together but neither of us will make the effort. I have been out with other guys since, but I have no feeling for them. I feel broken-hearted.

ANSWER: Your guilt about petting is probably a sign that you were not ready for that kind of relationship. I think you need the mental and spiritual relationship to come first and the physical after.

You should try to re-establish your connection with this friend if he is willing, but talk out the whole thing at the very beginning. Find some common goals, such as recreation or meetings with friends, and decide not to get into petting without being quite sure that you both want it.

Terrible Two Said Normal

REGINA (CP) — The rebellious behavior of a two-year-old child is a normal, almost predictable part of child development, says the director of the child development clinic at Winnipeg Children's Hospital.

But Dr. Kenneth McRae said if parents don't know how to handle that behavior, they may end up with a problem child.

"Aggressive behavior in children, ages three and four, probably outnumbers all other behavior problems we (at the clinic) have to deal with," he said.

McRae told the annual meeting of the Saskatchewan Registered Nurses' Association that such children are in almost constant trouble because of their behavior and, inevitably, either the mother or the father hits the child as punishment.

The doctor said hitting the child further aggravates the problem and a vicious circle develops. He said isolating the child when he misbehaves is more effective than physical punishment.

McRae said school-age children make up a large number of referrals to the child development centre. Most of them demonstrate some form of learning disability, something which should be detected by Grade 1.

He said the warning signals are always present during the first two years of school, although the problem may not manifest itself until later.

McRae said the highest-paid teachers should be those in kindergarten and Grade 1 because they need to be responsible for detecting children with potential learning disabilities.

The doctor also said the problems of a child who has never had a good relationship with his mother cannot be corrected by any amount of therapy or psychiatric treatment.

He said infant-mother bonding, the normal relationship which forms between a mother and child during the first year of life, "has tremendous implications for the future."

"If the relationship between the mother and child doesn't gel — if it doesn't get off the ground — the child's development suffers."

McRae said bonding problems make up a large number of problems in child development. He said many professionals, particularly social workers, contribute to the problem because they are unaware of the consequences when an infant is shifted from place to place and not given an opportunity for bonding.

Mopeds: Canada Lags

What's in Store

Joan Watson

Bike fever could hit at any time, and out there among the 10-speeds this spring you're sure to see the occasional moped put-puttering along.

In Europe, 15 million mopeds are in use, but Canada has only about 75,000 on the road so far.

There are a couple of reasons for this: We're still wedded to the car because our gas prices are considerably less than Europe's and we also have some pretty tough new moped legislation that calls for insurance, licensing and safety gear in many provinces.

However, if gas prices go out of sight, or if rationing ever becomes a reality, more consumers will take a second look at the moped, which gives four times the mileage of a small car.

There are two basic types.

The cheaper style has the little engine fixed on top of one wheel: for example, the Velosolex and AMF. The engine drives a small roller that clamps against the tire and turns the wheel. The advantages of these little bikes are their light weight, low price and the ability to convert to a conventional pedal bike.

The things you might not like about the simple type are shaky stability, feeble performance, a rough ride and small fuel capacity. You won't travel at the speed of light. Tops is about 20 mph. Prices start around $350.

If you have a little more money to put out for a moped, up to $800, have a look at the type with the engine placed low between the wheels. The power goes to the rear wheel through reduction gears and a drive chain or belt. With this rig you'll be able to keep up to street traffic travelling at 30 m.p.h. or 50 kilometres. Because this type is heavier, it costs more to buy and run it,

All mopeds must have pedals and most engines are just under the limit of 50 cc, about half the size of a lawn mower engine.

A moped has bicycle-style hand brakes, an automatic transmission and a tank that holds about four litres of fuel. It's easy to ride, except for the fact that without a low gear you're going to find it a little difficult to get going, or to get up a hill.

Some makes have a type of automatic low gear. Have a look at Motobecane, Vespa or Puch for this feature.

Another inconvenience is that you have to mix the oil and gas by hand for your fuel, unless you choose Cimatti or perhaps a Garelli.

Like any other bike, you'd do well to test drive it. Some dealers discourage this, but it's the only way to try out the comfort of the seat, pedals and handle bars.

Getting the right dealer is not only the key to getting the right moped, it's also important for service and parts. A lot of bikes once sold in Canada are no longer on the market. Then maintenance becomes a real problem.

Something else to check out before buying a motorized bike is the legislation in your province.

When mopeds first hit the scene in 1974, there was virtually no legislation governing them. You didn't have to wear a helmet, get a licence or buy insurance. Since then, province by province, laws have been introduced controlling their use. Only Alberta, Quebec and New Brunswick allow persons under 16 to drive a moped.

Quebec is the most lenient province of all. A 14-year old can drive a moped and no personal insurance, driver's licence or helmet are required.

Ontario, on the other hand, is tough. The operator must be 16 and needs a licence, personal insurance and a helmet. This costs the operator about $150 to $200 to get the bike on the road after purchase.

With the introduction of the moped laws, sales dropped from about 40,000 in 1975 to just over 7,000 last year. And only a handful of moped importers remain, almost all of them in Quebec.

In 1978, there were about 10 different brands coming into the country; now there are approximately five. For this reason, organizations that wanted to test and rate the product for consumers have been unable to do so. Many of the models slated for testing simply dropped out of the market. This poses a problem of parts availability and service for today's shopper.

Mopeds currently imported include Jawa, Motokov Canada, Montreal; Hercules, Sachs Motor Corp., 9615 Cote de Liesse, Dorval, Que.; Honda, Canadian Honda Motor Ltd., 50 Emblem Court, Agincourt, Ont.; Motobecane Mobylette, LCM Moto Sports Inc., 270 Beaubien West, Montreal; Puch, Bombardier, Boucherville, Que., and Solex, LCM Moto Sports Inc., 270 Beaubien West, Montreal.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: Two years ago I married George — a sweet, generous man with five grown children, all married with families of their own. My complaint: George and I have spent only six weeks alone since our marriage!

Whenever one of George's children considers a divorce, loses a job or wants to save for a vacation, he (or she) and their kids move in with their father and me. We have to clean up after them, watch their kids and treat them like guests. I am sick of kids living with us for weeks and sometimes months at a time!

We have a large home, but we're far from rich, and when they're here our grocery bills are sky high. They've yet to contribute one dime.

George and I get along fine until the kids move in, then we argue all the time.

I love George, but if these free-loaders don't leave us alone, I'm leaving him. Any advice?

— HAD IT

DEAR HAD IT: It's obvious that George is a soft touch for his kids, so don't YOU be the heavy. (Let George do it.) Tell him that you are through being a pigeon for a flock of homing pigeons. Then prepare to (a) live with the ills you know or (b) fly to others you know not of.

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago you had a letter from someone who said the minute he opened his newspaper his nose started to run, his eyes watered and itched, and he went into a sneezing fit. You said he was probably allergic to the ink in the newspaper. You were right.

Years ago my son was being treated by one of the most highly regarded allergists in the country. After many tests it was discovered that he was allergic to newsprint. The doctor advised him to dry out the newspaper thoroughly in a warm (200° F.) oven before reading it. My son followed the advice, and it worked!

— CHELMSFORD

DEAR CHELMSFORD: Thanks for the tip. And if any of you readers out there try it, let this serve as a warning. DO NOT overheat the newspaper. It contains highly inflammable material!

DEAR ABBY: Here's how our family decided who should get what after Granny died and left no will.

We all got together and cut the cards. High man got the item if more than one of us wanted it.

NO QUIBBLING

DEAR ABBY: I recently learned that my husband's grandmother was very much offended by the letter I wrote thanking her for her wedding gift. It seems that everyone in the family calls her "Nanna" but not being aware of this, I addressed her as "Mrs. Brown' in the salutation, and again in the body of the letter.

Abby, she never asked ME to call her "Nanna." In fact, I don't recall that she ever asked me to call her anything.

Quite frankly, since I have seen her only a few times, I thought the formal "Mrs. Brown" would be more appropriate — and anything more familiar would be a bit presumptuous.

Why can't people accept a thank you letter and appreciate its sincerity and promptness without trying to find something wrong with it?

— BUGGED

DEAR BUGGED: Some can. But not Nanna.

Difficult Job but Great Rewards

elizabeth forbes

Being a good foster parent is one of the hardest jobs in the world, but one of the most rewarding.

Margaret Tibbitt, supervisor in the resources and placement section of the ministry of human resources, uses those words over and over again as she conducts on-going fostering courses throughout the year.

Right now she is preparing for the final course before a summer break.

It starts with an information and registration night May 22 and continues with four weekly sessions, all in the human resources building at 1627 Fort starting at 7:30 p.m.

Anyone living in the capital region, including the Gulf Islands and everything south of the Malahat, is eligible to attend.

Marg Tibbitt explains these are the only courses of their kind on fostering in B.C.

Then she adds that while they are important from the angle of preparing people to become foster parents, those who attend are not obligated to do so.

"Some merely want to learn more about children, or perhaps about parenting and how to relate to their own families.

"It's a plus for us if they decide to take on a fostering role."

She describes the ideal foster parent as warm, loving, accepting people, with the capacity to give much and expect little in return, and with a desire to help a child fulfil its needs, not their own.

They must be ready to provide good substitute parenting by meeting the physical, emotional and social needs of children placed in the home and to perform the nurturing functions normally performed by a child's natural parents.

Good foster parents must also present identification models of positive adult functions by which children may pattern their own lives constructively. And they must continue to increase parental skills and to assist the social worker in developing the best future plans for children placed in the home.

Marg Tibbitt (centre) and foster parents Herman and Helen Bickel

Many of the children — even pre-schoolers — have emotional problems.

Who wouldn't, Marg Tibbitt asks, after what some of them have been through?

Returning to the upcoming course on fostering she explains that resource persons working with her include Ron Pollard, long-term foster-care supervisor; social worker Elizabeth Williams and experienced foster parents like Helen and Herman Bickel, who have five children of their own and three foster children.

An advisory committee includes Mavis Dean, president of the Capital Region Foster Parents Association, and Bernice Packford, supervisor of the parent recruitment program.

The course starts on information and registration night with a talk on what fostering is all about and a quick look at a foster family.

At the first two weekly sessions there will be discussion on such questions as why do parents need foster care for their children, legal aspects, separation and what it means to a child, ages and stages, and rules and what they mean to the child.

Third meeting deals with the importance of roots and with teamwork planning — social worker, foster family, natural family, school and community — as it affects the child.

Final session will take a look at placement, the mechanics of fostering and how to help the child feel happy when referred to a foster home.

There will also be a brief ceremony in which certificates will be presented to all who have completed the course.

Films and video tapes are used to flesh out the various discussions.

If you are interested and would like further information about the upcoming course, telephone 598-5121, the human resources junction centre.

Right now there are approximately 850 foster children in the capital region, Marg Tibbitt points out.

Some remain in foster care for only a few weeks or months. Others, whose parents can no longer take care of them, may stay in care for many years or be adopted.

A few are babies but the majority are older.

Those in greatest need of foster homes are children over 10 years of age, children with physical or mental handicaps and children from one family who should be kept together.

Returning to her belief that foster parenting is one of the hardest jobs in the world, but also the most rewarding she concludes with:

"It's socializing a three-year-old who needs a regular home routine. It's showing an eight-year-old that you won't send him away because he is naughty. It's helping a teen-ager understand why stealing is unnecessary."

Stress Not All Over Exams

LETHBRIDGE, Alta. (CP) — People take for granted that university students are under the greatest psychological and emotional stress during the weeks leading up to final examinations.

But a University of Lethbridge counsellor says the opposite is true — most of the problems come in the slack months such as early October and early January.

"During a lull when they've come to focus on themselves is when the trouble starts," says Joel Brass, crisis counsellor for the university.

When students ar busy academically they don't have time to dwell on personal problems, or else they forget them completely, he says.

Often, the superficial problem which brings a student in for counselling is not important. The real problems are lack of self-esteem and a concern about the meaning of their work at university, says Brass.

"A big question for a lot of them is: 'Am I smart enough to cut the mustard?' " he says. "There's a lot of ego involved in proving themselves."

Once the real problem is uncovered, alleviating stress is easier.

Brass says current university students are a different breed from those of the 1960s, subject to different pressures.

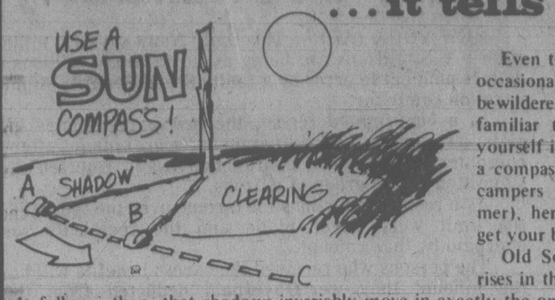
THE MOTHER EARTH NEWS®
. . . it tells you how



Even the best of the frontiersmen occasionally became turned around, bewildered or just plain lost in unfamiliar territory. If you ever find yourself in that predicament without a compass (and a certain number of campers and hikers will this summer), here's how to use the sun to get your bearings.

Old Sol, as we all know, always rises in the east and sets in the west. It follows, then, that shadows invariably move in exactly the opposite direction . . . and we can use that fact to plot true north any time the sun shines.

Find a stick about a yard long and push it into the center of a fairly level and brush-free spot of ground. The limb doesn't have to be vertical: you can incline it, if necessary, in any direction that gives you the most convenient shadow.

Once the stick is securely positioned, mark the tip of its shadow with a stone or twig. Then wait 10 or 15 minutes (or until the shadow's point has moved a few inches) and put a second pebble or bit of wood on the ground to denote the new location. Finally, draw a straight line in the dirt from the first marker through and about a foot past the second.

If you'll then stand with the toe of your left foot at the first location point and the toe of your right foot at the end of the line you drew, you'll be facing true north. The line, in other words, runs directly east and west no matter where on the earth's surface you draw it. That alone, of course, won't get you home when you're lost . . . but it should orient you enough to help you get started in the right direction.

And if you're really lost, remember that your wisest course of action is no action at all. Just sit down, make yourself as comfortable as possible and wait for a rescue party to find you.

Tiny Sacs in Colon Require MD's Care

your health

By L. L. Coleman, MD

I recently had x-rays taken because it was thought that I had an ulcer of the stomach or the intestines. No ulcer was found. Instead, it turned out that I have diverticulosis. Now, I'm concerned that this condition might be worse than an ulcer. I'm so worried I don't know where to turn. Will you help me? — Mrs. S. S.

DEAR MRS. S.:

When you say you "don't know where to turn," you obviously have turned away from that which should be your greatest source of support, your doctor. It was he (or she) who was astute enough to rule out the suspected condition of an ulcer. That, of course should give you a great sense of assurance.

The condition of diverticulosis that was diagnosed by x-ray should be of little concern to you. Diverticula are tiny sacs which are commonly found in the large intestine, or colon. They are said to occur in almost 50 per cent of all people past the age of 50. The condition is known as diverticulosis. It is only when one or more of these sacs become inflamed or infected that symptoms may occur. This is known as diverticulitis. The presence of diverticula without such infection or inflammation may exist for years without producing any evidence of intestinal distress.

Let me assure you that there is no reason for you to be concerned simply because these tiny sacs are present.

There has been a departure of thinking about diverticulosis. Recent studies suggest that a low residue diet may be responsible for the formation of diverticula. Consequently, it is now felt that there is a greater need for an increase in dietary roughage, in order to move the stool more actively through the colon, or large intestine.

Bran fibre, wholewheat bread and bran cereal are valuable in preventing both the formation of the diverticula and its complications.

Once the diagnosis of diverticulosis is made, it does not carry with it the implication that complications are inevitable. Nevertheless, all people with this condition should be under the care of a doctor, especially if any unusual symptoms occur. As with all other illnesses, early recognition and early treatment can prevent more serious problems.

Are there some types of eggs that are lower in cholesterol than others? — Miss D. O.

DEAR MISS O.:

It has been said that brown eggs may have a higher concentration of cholesterol than white eggs.

Experimentation is ongoing by some who believe that hens that are fed diets of polyunsaturated vegetable oil may lay eggs that are lower in cholesterol.

As far as experts know now, eggs of all kinds have an enormously high level of cholesterol and should be avoided by those who are concerned about this problem.

Frequency More Damaging Than Volume of Sweets

MONCTON, N.B. (CP) — One sugar candy every few hours is less harmful to the teeth than a handful eaten all at once — right?

Wrong, says Christiane Brasseur, a dietetic intern at Dr. Georges Dumont Hospital here.

"Dental decay is related to more than just the total amount of sugar eaten," she says. "Rather, it is the frequency of eating sugar-laden snacks that is the vital factor."

Studies have shown that each time the surfaces of teeth are exposed to sweets, acid levels increase and remain that way for at least 30 minutes. That's the period of time when the damage is done to tooth enamel.

Thus, if you space out your candies, your teeth will be exposed to damage for a greater period of the day.

Brasseur's comments came as a committee of food experts joined with the New Brunswick Association of Dental Hygienists to launch a public information program to combat the bad effects on the teeth of snacking.

Chris Robb, a dental hygienist with the provincial health department, says it must be accepted that snacking is a lifestyle feature and can never be eliminated. Therefore, it must be controlled.

She says dental decay among young children, particularly in rural areas with unfluoridated water, is a special worry.

It is estimated that 72 per cent of New Brunswick youngsters between the ages of 3 and 10 have decayed teeth. Snacking on the wrong foods is the major reason, the experts say.

Greece Offers Travel Bargains

Youth on the Move

By LUCY IZON

Finding a travel bargain in Europe is hard work these days — but not nearly so tough once you get to Greece.

How about a double room overlooking the Mediterranean for less than $5 a night and a full hot dinner for less than $2? Add a sun-drenched beach and it becomes clear why Greeece is one of the most popular destinations for the young traveller.

For the adventurous, there are tavernas that allow you, for a modest charge, to sleep under the stars on their roofs. Camping outside authorized grounds is as illegal as it is free but in Greece all that means is that just about everybody does it. Avoid the public park, tourist beach or farmer's land and there should be no problem.

The next best bet, about $2 a night, is a youth hostel. A pamphlet listing their 29 locations is available at the Greek Youth Hostels Association, 4 Dragatsoniou St., Athens. I will warn you though, the hostels I visited were not up to the mark of other European countries. They are less expensive but poorly maintained. And you really have to keep an eye on your valuables.

For a little extra, there's the pension, and in Greece it's a terrific deal. Double and triple rooms in small villages usually run less than $4 a night single. These facilities are regulated by the government and official rates are posted on room doors.

Island-hopping is a favorite pastime and there are two ways to go about it. The tourist board office supplies maps and transportation timetables or you can go to the port authorities who can advise you on ferry or fishing boat trips.

It is cheap to travel on the huge, ocean-going inter-island ferries. Deck class, though, means no warm bed unless it's the off-season and the purser is in a congenial mood. Then some are known to give the empty berths to deck class passengers. I've met many travellers who've been lucky but it has never happened to me.

When travelling by ferry make your schedule flexible. Rough weather and high seas, particularly in the off-season, make docking difficult.

With an International Student Identity Card you can receive a 30 per cent discount on ferry boats between Patras, Corfu and Brindisi. You're also eligible for a 50 per cent discount on rail tickets at border stations and at Patras for the internal network. Otherwise buses are convenient, inexpensive and a great way to see the countryside.

Students enter most Greek museums at half-price Monday to Saturday, but if you're not a student you'll find sites are free to all on Sunday.

And when it comes to dining, avoid restaurants with tourist menus and head for the local tavernas. Don't worry if you can't read the menu, it's quite all right to use the pick-and-point method at the serving counter.

For quick snacks, there's a lot of street vendors. Souvlaki is to the Greeks what the hamburger is to North Americans. It's inexpensive, fast food, usually made of meat, tomatoes, and onions wrapped in deep-fried bread. Next choice is tiropite, a type of cheese pie. Both are filling and cost about 30 cents.

For Greek-style entertainment, check tourist board offices. There are more than 70 religious festivals, fairs, exhibitions, wine festivals and cultural events between May and September. Most are free.

Athens itself is not only an inexpensive city to visit, it's a good place to search for inexpensive fares to North Africa, the Middle East and Asia. The best breaks are still for students, but with a little luck non-students can do almost as well.

If you arrive in Athens you'll find the centre of activity around Sintagma Square. Joining the square are Filellinon and Nikis Streets — that's where to start shopping for deals.

The best breaks for air travel are still the flights offered by the Students Air Travel Association (SATA). These can be purchased in student travel offices in many countries. The problem is that they tend to be booked up well in advance of the high travel period.

If you shop around from agency to agency you can find some good bargains. Before I left North America I inquired about air fares from Athens to London. As a non-student the least expensive flight I could find was close to $400. I went to six youth travel agencies in Athens and two of them offered me a student fare — ID card included — for under $165.

Passionate Pitch Made for Scrap

EAST BERLIN (Reuter) — With a passion normally reserved for the ideological battle for hearts and minds, East Germany is exhorting its people to offer something more to the state — their old pots and pans, worn-out clothes and old newspapers.

Starved of indigenous raw materials and faced by spiralling costs on the world market, the Communist state has launched a massive press and radio campaign to explain the value of scrap metal, glass, textiles and paper as "secondary raw materials."

"Don't let that old stove pipe block up the cellar or that old kettle gather dust in the corner. Take them to the collection points and get cash in your hand," one East Berlin newspaper urged in tones reminiscent of wartime scrap collection campaigns in other lands.

State-run scrap collectors are offering free lottery tickets as well as money in an attempt to whip up more enthusiasm for those too lethargic to go to the collection points. There are containers dotted around the cities for old wood and metal.

The most successful collecting method has been the mobilization of children through schools — which all have to pledge to gather old newspapers — and Communist youth groups.

Under slogans such as "Special Mission — Scrap Hunting" and "Wanted — Millions for the Republic," Communist youth brigades compete for prizes and honors by tracking down discarded junk on vacant land, in backyards and people's homes.

Hordes of children go from door to door appealling for old bottles and paper with a dedication that would warm the heart of a Western scoutmaster.

East German newspapers, usually restrained on other issues, hammer home the value of recycling in hard-hitting full-page ads listing the benefits it brings in raising living standards and helping the economy.

They point out that 1,000 tons of steel scrap can be turned into 11,500 refrigerators; that one ton of plastic waste can save on the import of 20 tons of oil, or that an extra two pounds of paper from each family every month would save one million trees.

For the East Berlin government it is all a matter of finances, not conservation-minded ideals. East Germany desperately needs alternatives to costly material imports.

Millions too Much Paid U.S. Elderly

NEW YORK (AP) — The Daily News says 1.3 million elderly U.S. citizens are being asked to repay millions of dollars paid out in error by a faulty Social Security Administration computer.

In a copyrighted report, the newspaper quotes officials as saying the overpayments were made after a computer in Baltimore malfunctioned and rejected data submitted by the group of citizens.

As a result, deductions for income over the federal $4,500 limit were never made and the recipients were overpaid by that amount.

The persons who received the excess benefits will have the amount they were overpaid deducted from their cheques for the rest of the year, social security officials said.

U.K. Group Opposes Police Power Play

MANCHESTER, England (CP) — Police demands for greater powers in detaining and interrogating suspects have been strenuously opposed by the National Council for Civil Liberties.

The council has criticized the police for ignoring the problem of people who are wrongly convicted of criminal offences.

"In making their demands for more powers, the police have lost sight of the need to safeguard the innocent, and the need to retain the co-operation of the public in their fight against crime," the council said in a recent report to the Royal Commission on Criminal Procedure.

"We urge that no confessional statement should be admissible in evidence at the trial of a defendant unless it is taken in the presence of a solicitor. And even when the confessional statement is recorded in the presence of a solicitor there should be some corroborative evidence of guilt before the accused can be convicted."

The council insists that the right of silence for the accused should be retained and additional safeguards introduced for the interrogation of mentally retarded people, young persons, immigrants with language difficulties and suspects with serious drug problems.

Discussing police powers of arrest, the council urged that more use of summonses should be made to bring people before the courts in minor cases when an arrest is unnecessary.

"In general, only those offences punishable by more than five years in jail should be arrestable and there should be no statutory exceptions as there are now."

The council maintains that police should have no right to detain a suspect for questioning. But if a person is arrested on suspicion, the police should be able to detain him for up to four hours without charge, it suggests.

"They should be able to apply to a magistrate for a 12-hour extension," and a Crown Court judge should have power to grant a further 12-hour extension."

The council described as irresponsible a proposal by Sir David McNee, Britain's metropolitan police chief, that police should be able to hold a suspect for 72 hours before charging him, and that there should be no limit in the number of 72-hour extensions police can request.

"What he is proposing," the council said, "is the possibility of indefinite detention by the police of a suspect on the signature of one magistrate with no opportunity for the suspect to be heard."

Rail Plan Rekindles Memories

By THOMAS LIPPMAN

DAMASCUS (WP) — Evoking memories of T.E. Lawrence and the Arab uprising against the Turks, Syria, Jordan and Saudi Arabia are planning to rebuild the Hejaz railway from here to Medina.

It is an ambitious project that has been talked about off and on for decades without result. This time it appears that the three countries are serious about it.

The single-track, narrow-gauge, 833-mile rail line was a marvel of its day. It was completed in 1908, during the region of the Ottoman Sultan Abdul Hamid II. Its working life lasted less than 10 years. When the First World War broke out, the desert tribes of what is now Saudi Arabia backed the British in hopes of throwing off the Turkish yoke they had carried for four centuries. Arab raiding parties with Lawrence and other British officers repeatedly blew up track, bridge and rolling stock.

The old line is still in use between here and Amman, Jordan, with a few trains cautiously picking their way down the deteriorating track. South of Amman, only a few rusting hulks remain on stretches of abandoned track.

Talk of rebuilding the line has been received with well-deserved skepticism in the Middle East. The project has been discussed, approved and even put out to preliminary engineering, and even those involved in the latest plan are not entirely convinced it will be carried out.

That is because it would cost about $1 billion and it is not clear where Syria and Jordan would come up with the money to pay their shares. In addition, the Saudis reportedly are reluctant to finance a project that would be an easy target for Israeli air strikes in the event of a new regional war.

At the moment, however, "this is very much a live project," according to Mounif Akili, secretary of the General Administration for the Recommissioning of the Hejaz Railway set up by the three countries to plan reconstruction of the railroad.

Interviewed in his sparsely furnished office in Damascus' diplomatic quarter, Akili said the project is at a crucial stage — selection of an engineering consortium to prepare detailed construction plans. The plans will cover complete rebuilding of the railroad to modern European specifications, permitting a direct rail link between the Arabian Peninsula and Europe though Turkey.

Akili said an original list of about 100 prospective contractors has been pared to two, one an American-West German partnership, the other American-Indian.

The ministers of transport and communications of the three countries, which form the administration's governing board, were to have met this month to award the $20 million contract, he said, but the meeting was postponed without explanation.

"We don't know if it will be in a week or a month or when," he said. "Nothing is really going to happen until that contract is awarded."

He declined to speclate on the cause of the delay. Observers here believe it may have resulted from a governmental paralysis in Saudi Arabia caused by a prolonge absence of Crown Prince Fahd. It surely was not caused by the Jordanians, whose transport minister, Ali Suheimat, is a big booster of the project. He recently spoke of it as "vital," envisioning a major new transport link between Europe and the Arabian Peninsula, and said several countries are eager to provide financing.

Akili said the participants are convinced that the railroad is a practical proposal that would be economically viable.

"Freight traffic between Europe and this region has grown at a dizzying rate," he said. "The trucks just can't handle it. The question of economic feasibility has been settled."

Sixty Wives - No Problem

Written for CP
By K. R. S. Rajan

NEW DELHI (CP) — "I have no serious domestic problem — my wives are just wonderful," said Ang Deiwang, chief of the Knoyak warrior tribe in Nagaland.

He made the comment recently after acquiring his 60th wife, a pretty 23-year-old woman, herself an expert handler of swords and guns.

According to a report in the newspaper Amrit Bazaar Patrika of Calcutta, the 50-year-old tribal chief of Nagaland, a mountainous area adjoining Communist China, said that all the 60 marriages are perfectly legal.

Deiwang noted that although polygamy is banned under India's marriage laws, these are not applicable to the tribes of Nagaland.

"We are grateful to the Government of India for respecting our traditional practices," the Knoyak chief said.

Despite Deiwang's huge stock of wives, he only has 17 children.

A government welfare worker in Nagaland says there is a kind of family planning among Nagaland tribes.

"A child is allowed to be conceived only when an additional family member is necessary. There is no indiscriminate rise in population," the government worker explains.

Chief Deiwang lords over a number of hamlets in the almost inaccessible frontier area. Some of the hamlets fall under the authority of the government of Burma.

"Like the Indians, the Burmese are very considerate to us," Deiwang says. "Even the Chinese Communists have sent fraternal greetings to us."

The Lord is my Shepherd
I shall not want
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures
He leadeth me beside the still waters
He restoreth my soul
He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake
Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death
I will fear no evil
For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff
they comfort me
Thou preparest a table
before me in the presence of mine enemies
Thou anointest my

My cup runneth over
Surely goodness and

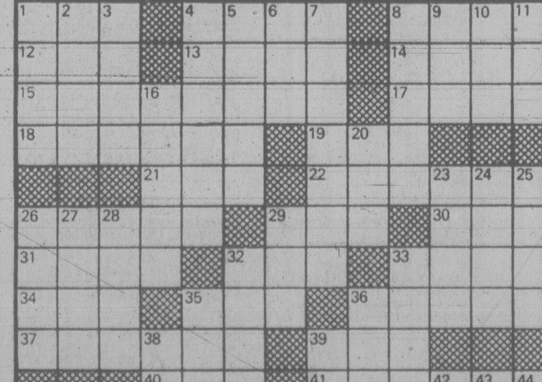
Answer to yesterday's puzzle.



What Survives Salt Spray?

GARDENING
hilda beastall

Almost every month of the year sees new arrivals in Victoria, many drawn by reports of gardening and golfing the year round.

It is in the merry month of May that even homeowners beside salt water begin to concentrate more on the garden possibilities than on the view. What to plant that will take the wind, often laden with salt spray?

If very near the water where spray is frequent, brooms are a first line of defence. The dense, green branches look well against sloping rocky ground all year, and the bright flowers in shades of yellow and gold are a spread-out bonus in spring and early summer.

To look for in nurseries now are various colors of hybrid Cytisus. Always grown for sale in cans, these plants thrive under tough conditions of poor soil, drought, wind, and because they are blessed with the smallest of leaves, they are tolerant of salt spray.

One thing brooms do not tolerate is moving, once planted, leave them.

A relative of Cytisus is Spartium junceum, also a practically leafless broom.

This plant has a long flowering period, from June through September, because it blooms on new growth of the current season. When branches are broken by a gale as sometimes happens in winter, new growth starts at the base in spring and will bloom during the same year.

Spartium is the tallest of the more commonly grown brooms, deserving a place where full force gales do not strike; there will then be less winter breakage.

It has been strange to see the big fleshy evergreen leaves of Megasea cordifolia taking wind containing salt spray without harm in all but the coldest of winters, coupled with ocean winds.

This is what I rank as a durable plant, low-growing, with large, leathery leaves that have pleasant tinges of dark maroon at the edges.

In earliest spring, thick stems of jewel-like pink flowers centred with gold crowd the established plants. These also like rather poor soil, sloping for drainage, or among boulders.

For trees, pines can be relied on, specially the Austrian pine (Pinus austriacus) and Pinus mugo and its dwarf spreading varieties.

Grey-leaved herbaceous plants (with soft stems, not shrubby hard stems like brooms) are known as being salt resistant and sand resistant (in desert sand storms). Many of these are native to the Mediterranean area where no doubt winter gales carry plenty of salt spray to the hilly slopes.

Here we grow the silvery Santolina chamaecyparissus needing an April cut back to produce a dense mound of finely cut foliage. Although yellow flowers are produced in summer, many gardeners shear off the stems before they open, condemning them as too strong a mustard color; but the silver mounds are attractive all year.

Another more shrubby plant, is Senecio laxifolia, having grey leaves with silky hairs to give a silver effect in summer, but rather more green in winter. This too has mustard-yellow flowers which are sacrificed in the interest of aesthetics by most gardeners.

Two large growing flowering shrubs withstanding salty gales at Saxe Point Park, Esquimalt, are fine specimens of the summer blooming Buddleia davadi and Fuchsia riccartoni, the latter in continuous bloom from August through to winter.

Other plants will be seen in various situations along the coastal gardening area. Noticing them and discovering their names will help newcomers fulfil their dream of a garden on Canada's Pacific coast.

Radioactive Water Leak Continues in U.S. Plant

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — Officials of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) said Thursday highly-radioactive water is continuing to build up at the stricken Three Mile Island nuclear power plant near Harrisburg, Pa.

The officials said the water, leaking from the reactor to the floor of its containment building, has risen to about two metres since the March 28 accident.

Three huge tanks have been installed at the plant to funnel off the radioactive cooling water that was leaking out and will be in operation by the middle of this month, an NRC official said at a public hearing.

Victor Stello, director of the NRC's division of operating reactors, said he does not believe there would be any significant radiation leakage when the removal process begins.

"It is not possible to say that there won't be any further releases," he added, however.

Stello said radiation readings around the plant, which spewed radioactive gases into the atmosphere when the accident occurred, remained normal, as they have for the last several weeks.

He said experts hope to slow the rate of leakage from the crippled reactor by reducing water pressure.

The reactor core now is being cooled by a natural circulation system and does not require water pressure.

Meanwhile in Fredericton, dents discovered in boiler tubing at the Point Lepreau nuclear power plant pose potentially serious problems for operation of the plant but not its safety, the chairman of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission said Thursday.

In an interview, William Cockburn said there will have to be further testing to determine the extent of the denting problem.

"At its worst, it could mean replacement of the four boilers," Cockburn said.

The investigation of the tubing in the Lepreau boilers began about a month ago when problems turned up in boilers at nuclear power plants in Ontario and Quebec. The boilers at the Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick plants are all made by Babcock and Wilcox Canada Ltd.

Cockburn said it will be at least another month before the extent of the damage at Lepreau is determined. The investigation is being done by representatives of Babcock and Wilcox, Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. and a number of independent persons.

Any repair or replacement of Lepreau's four boilers is the responsibility and at the expense of Babcock and Wilcox, Cockburn said.

The boilers, which contain thousands of the tubes carrying heated heavy water to the generating turbines are under warranty from the company.

The power commission chairman stressed that the denting problem is not a safety hazard. He said he is confident the design problems at Lepreau will not erode public confidence in the nuclear alternative.

"Once the first flush of concern is over and the Three Mile incident is examined, assessed and the alternatives considered, I think there will be more awareness that in the short term, nuclear energy is the only alternative."

Islanders Write SOS In Sand

SCOTT AIR FORCE BASE, Ill. (UPI) — A group of people on Pikelot Island in the Pacific scrawled an SOS in the sand because they were running out of food and were suffering from severe diarrhea, a military spokesman said today.

A Navy P-3 patrol aircraft Thursday saw the SOS during a routine patrol and later observed the words "food, water, we need rice," carved into the sand, followed by a message reading "three head wounds," said Paul Munt, a spokesman for a search and rescue group at Scott Air Force Base.

The plane was unable to establish radio contact with the group because of a language barrier, so a Navy reconnaissance plane was flown to the island carrying Dusad Haire, a nurse who speaks Trukese, the language of Pikelot, which is part of the Truk Islands.

The plane reached the island early today and, according to military communications, determined there were 50 persons on the island, 10 of whom were suffering from severe diarrhea, Munt said. Some children on the island also were ill, he said.

"The 'three head wounds' apparently turned out to be the symptoms of severe diarrhea — headaches," Munt said.

Messages also said the group only had enough food to last 24 hours, Munt said.

A Trukese commercial vessel, the Micro Trader, was on its way to the island with food and medical supplies.

There was no indication the group had been shipwrecked on the island, Munt said.

Diamond Ring Thieves Haunt Auction Houses

GENEVA (AP) — Thieves stole two diamond rings worth a total of $350,000 this week from two auction houses, which say the more precautions they take, the more devious the thieves become.

Monday at Christies, a man calmly examined a $117,000, 5.19-carat diamond ring, quickly switched it for a worthless copy, then melted into a crowd, authorities said.

He was gone by the time the swap, recorded by closed circuit television, was noticed. The tape will be shown on local television to see if the public might recognize the thief, police said.

Late Tuesday, from a heavily-guarded Sotheby exhibition aboard a paddle-wheeler on Lake Geneva, someone opened a locked case and removed a 9.42-carat diamond ring valued at $206,000.

When the pressure's on, Caterpillar XT hoses hang tough.

Durability. Reliability. Flexibility. That's what you pay for in hydraulic hoses and couplings. That's what you get from Caterpillar XT-3 and XT-5 products: durability to resist oil, weather and abrasions for month after hardworking month; reliability over millions of impulse cycles at maximum pressures without leaks or blow-offs; flexibility when the pressure gets high or the temperature gets low.

And there's more. The Cat collet-type coupling is re-usable over and over again, so you cut replacement costs, maintenance bills and stand-by time.

For highway transport hydraulics, bulk handling equipment, forest industry applications, marine hydraulics or heavy equipment, you can't buy a better hose-and-coupling combination.

You can count on Caterpillar quality because we proof-test every inch of XT-3 and XT-5 at 200% of maximum working pressure to save you equipment failure and costly downtime. That's why we sold over 73 kilometres of XT-3 and XT-5 last year. That's probably further than you'll have to go to one of Finning's 51 locations in British Columbia, the Yukon and the Mackenzie Valley, NWT.

Long-Lost Twins Look in Mirror

CINCINNATI (UPI) — On Aug. 19, 1939, a 14-year-old unwed girl gave birth to identical twin boys in Piqua, Ohio.

A few weeks later, the twins were put up for adoption and taken in by different families — the Ernest Springer family in Piqua, and the Jess Lewis family in Lima, Ohio, 45 miles away.

Apparently through bureaucratic misinformation, neither family knew at the time that their adopted son had a twin brother.

About a year later, the Lewis family discovered through final adoption papers their adopted son had a twin, but they couldn't find out who had adopted him.

So, the twins grew up in different homes 45 miles away, not knowing the other, and went on to lead separate adult lives.

But the Lewis twin, who learned from his adoptive family that he had a brother, kept searching for his look-alike.

Finally, nearly 40 years after birth, he found probate court records this year that led him to his brother, now living in Dayton, Ohio.

When the twins got together, they discovered some amazing coincidences about their separate lives.

— The Springer family named their adopted son Jim. The Lewis family named their adopted son Jim.

— Both boys had had pet dogs. Both named their dogs "Toy."

— After school, both took law enforcement training. Both enjoyed similar hobbies: blueprinting, drafting and carpentry.

— Jim Lewis had been married three times, Jim Springer twice. Both their first wives were named Linda. Both their second wives were named Betty.

Both named their first sons James Allan.

In a visit to Cincinnati Wednesday, the twins said they had enjoyed good lives from their adoptive parents, but said their lives are now better than ever.

"When I went to meet my brother for the first time, I was a nervous wreck, wondering what it would be like," said Jim Lewis. "But when I met him, I became absolutely calm. It felt so good. It was like looking in a mirror."

"We both said we felt like we'd had an empty place in our lives that we don't have any more," added Jim Springer.

"We get along beautifully together. It's like both of us getting a whole new family."

Both are six-foot tall, weigh 180 pounds, have dark hair and brown eyes. Their faces are identical, the only difference being their hairstyles. Springer wears his in a Beatles mop-top style, while Lewis' hair is combed back.

University of Minnesota reseachers who specialize in studying twins recently examined the two for a week to study similarities and differences in twins who had grown up separately. Similarities were the rule.

"They found out that our brainwaves and heartbeat patterns are the same," Springer said. "Our handwriting is similar. We have virtually identical fingerprints. Our eye and ear structures are exactly the same, which is the real test of twins."

"And," he added, "the results of all the tests we took looked like one person had taken the same tests twice."

Treaty Protects Suspect

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuter) — A federal judge has denied Britain's request for the extradition of a suspected Irish Republican Army (IRA) terrorist in connection with a series of barracks bombings five years ago, it was disclosed Thursday.

U.S. Judge Frederick Woelflen ruled late Wednesday that 30-year-old Peter McMullen is exempt from extradition proceedings because of a 1972 treaty between the United States and Britain which prohibits the extradition of suspects charged with political crimes.

However, Deputy Public Defender William Goodman said that McMullen is subject to deportation to the Republic of Ireland.

Judge Woelflen also denied McMullen's request for political asylum and ordered him to remain in jail on $500,000 bond.

THIS IS THE BEST DARN KNIFE SHARPENER AROUND

Now, everyone in the family can sharpen all your household knives professionally and without any risk of damage to your best knives.

This extraordinary invention is so unique that the sharpening results are difficult to believe even when you are looking at them. It utilizes the familiar slicing motion alternating from rod to rod slicing straight down across the rods. The angle of the rods gives the correct sharpening angle.

This alumina ceramic sharpener is as though we straightened the traditional rim of a crock, loaded it with a strong abrasive and placed the rim in such a manner that you can easily re-edge scalloped, serrated and wedge ground edges by holding the knife blade straight up and down and moving it across the rods. Metal deposits on the rods can be removed with ordinary kitchen cleanser. The rods are very hard and will not wear out.

KELOWNA (CP) — The first thing his re-elected Social Credit government will do is make peace with labor, says Premier Bill Bennett.

Bennett said he will ask labor leaders to meet him in Victoria to discuss "how we might better serve the people of the province not as special interest groups, but as serving B.C. interests."

Bennett said he feels no animosity towards labor.

"We are their government. I will work with them and for them."

Following his victory, Bennett told reporters that organized labor provided strong support for the New Democratic Party and he does not want to face that type of opposition again.

The legislature probably will be called early next month to pass legislation outlined in the throne speech in March and the budget which was introduced in early April, he added.

Bennett said he wasn't prepared to comment on changes to his cabinet. Three ministers — Agriculture Minister Cyril Shelford, Deregulation Minister Sam Bawlf and Tourism Minister Elwood Veitch — were defeated.

Bennett had attacked labor several times during the campaign, focusing most of his attention on union leaders, particularly Jim Kinnaird, B.C. Federation of Labor president.

Bennett said he was happy with his victory because the majority will allow him to provide positive government.

"In my view the future never looked better," he said. "We can look forward now to a greater level and measure of prosperity than ever before.

"It must be earned and the challenge is not only to government but to all of us to make things happen for our young, for our seniors, for all of us."

Socreds Win by Five, PCs, Grits Scratched

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

Premier Bill Bennett's Socred government edged back into office Thursday with a five seat majority in an election that eliminated the Tories and Liberals as viable forces in provincial politics.

Neither party elected an MLA in a two-way fight that saw the Socreds win 31 seats to 26 for Dave Barrett's NDP.

The election marks the first time since party politics were introduced to the province in 1903 that MLAs from only two parties will be represented in the house. Even in pre-CCF days, there was always at least one independent or labor member.

The closeness of the contest is illustrated by the popular vote percentages — 49 per cent for the Socreds to 46 per cent for the NDP.

The result marks almost total polarization of politics in the province and serves as a clear warning to Bennett's party which saw its 1975 lead of 17 seats over the NDP drop to just five.

When Bennett appoints a neutral speaker from within his ranks, that margin slips to four.

The NDP returned all 18 of its incumbents while the Socreds suffered a number of losses including three cabinet ministers.

Conservative leader Vic Stephens and Liberal leader Jev Tothill both suffered personal defeat as their parties were wiped out.

In the smaller pre-redistribution 55 seat legislature in 1975, the Socreds held 35 seats, the NDP 18 and the Tories and Liberals one each.

The Socreds held the same 49 per cent of the popular vote they did last time.

Despite the loss, the bright note for the NDP was the climb from 39 per cent to 46 per cent this time — the best the party has ever done in B.C., even when it formed the government in 1972.

Bennett who was the first declared winner in the province (the CBC computer declared his victory at 8:22 p.m.) was somewhat subdued as the rest of the results came in from around the province.

He urged Barrett and the NDP to work with his government without confrontation for the good of all British Columbians.

Bennett said a June session of the legislature is likely, but he offered no hints as to the cabinet layout of his new government.

One observer pointed out the impressive NDP percentage means Bennett can never again run to the people with the fear campaign that the "Socialist hordes are at the gate," since nearly one in every two B.C.

TV Set Upstages 'The Real Thing'

They don't call it the age of image politics for nothing.

Throughout the campaign, politicians have done everything they could to get on television, quite simply because they believe it is the most powerful medium for winning over voters.

The power of the tube became painfully evident at the NDP's Esquimalt-Port Renfrew campaign headquarters Thursday night when candidate Frank Mitchell was hoisted up on a table to give his victory speech.

Mitchell had got out only a few sentences when the whole crowd turned away from him. At the other end of the room there was Frank Mitchell on television.

Even Mitchell was watching.

After a few minutes someone in the crowd yelled: "Turn it off! We've got the real thing."

Given a choice, it seems, people prefer the image.

Barber Team Clips Socreds

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

"Sam Bawlf has been deregulated!" Victoria NDP party workers shouted Thursday night when it was announced both Charles Barber and Gordon Hanson of the NDP had been elected in the two-seat riding.

Victory for Barber was a foregone conclusion from the earliest results and the main interest centred on whether Hanson would snatch the second seat from Bawlf, provincial minister of deregulation.

Shortly after 10 p.m. Bawlf came to the NDP victory party at the Union Centre to concede defeat.

"The next time you see me I'll be fishing and sailing," he said.

Moments later Barber and Hanson arrived and there was a round of handshaking with Bawlf and Mayor Mike Young, the second defeated Social Credit candidate.

Both sides agreed the campaign had been fair and clean.

Then Hanson brought down the house by declaring his victory was due mainly to the campaign efforts of Barber, who topped the polls in winning re-election.

Barber said he was pleased that Victoria now had two NDP MLAs. It was unfortunate Social Credit had been re-elected, he said, suggesting the result might have been different if Social Credit had not carried out a redistribution before the vote, eliminating three NDP seats.

The Victoria election race was over quickly.

As soon as the polls closed, about 35 Social Credit party workers gathered at the Princess Mary to sip drinks and watch the returns on television.

At 8:45 p.m. there was a loud cheer when it was announced Saanich and the Islands MLA Hugh Curtis had overcome an early NDP lead and was comfortably in front.

Then a stunning announcement: "And in Victoria the two NDP candidates have been declared elected."

There were a few disbelieving shouts and then silence. People started to drift away.

At the same time at NDP headquarters about 200 workers were revving up for a victory party, watching the see-saw battle that had been virtually a tie in the early going.

But the party atmosphere faded and the nail-biting began as Social Credit started to edge out in front and then extend its lead.

By 10 p.m. even the most optimistic NDP supporters said the main battle had been lost and the crowd, now more than 500 strong, began to drown its sorrows while

Brain Grafts Offer Cure for Parkinson's?

By VICTOR COHN

WASHINGTON (WP) — Scientists here have for the first time successfully grafted brain tissue from healthy to brain-damaged animals to correct a severe movement disorder.

The striking achievement — if it can be repeated in more animals, then, safely, in humans — might lead to a revolutionary new surgical treatment for Parkinson's disease and other human disorders caused by faulty brain chemistry.

An international research team led by three scientists of the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH), and including others at the University of Colorado and Sweden's famed Karolinska Institute, collaborated in the pioneering work.

Their report appears in the current issue of Science, weekly journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

The NIMH research team created brain lesions in rats, much like those found in human Parkinsonism, a disease marked by severe tremors and rigid muscles. The scientists destroyed the substantia nigra, a part of the brain stem that plays a key role in producing dopamine — a chemical involved in nerve transmission and found only in lowered amounts in Parkinsonism.

As a result of the brain damage, limited to one side of the brain to avoid killing the rats, the animals could walk in only circles.

The scientists then removed a tiny part of the brains of rat fetuses, a part containing the darkish substantia nigra. They transplanted this healthy tissue to the damaged rats — to a site near the front of the brain that controls dopamine-mediated movement.

The transplanted tissue grew and was not rejected.

Within a month, the movements in most of the 29 brain-damaged rates improved. There was little improvement in some, but improvement of 50 per cent or more in more than half the animals and 70 per cent improvements in some.

PM Sets Constitution Timetable

Times News Services

MONTREAL — Prime Minister Trudeau said Thursday that a re-elected Liberal government would move to throw off the country's constitutional "colonial link" to Britain within 30 days of the May 22 election, re-igniting a reform process that has baffled domestic governments for 52 years.

Trudeau's proposals immediately sparked stiff rebuttals from the other main federal party leaders. Opposition Leader Joe Clark accused the prime minister of more confrontation politics and New Democratic Party Leader Ed Broadbent said constitutional patriation is less important than reclaiming the economy from foreign interests.

(See other federal election stories on pages 14 and 15.)

Trudeau told 1,500 supporters his government would recall Parliament within a month to propose a joint Commons-Senate declaration calling on Britain to hand over control of the 1867 British North America Act — Canada's underlying constitutional law.

With this symbolic gesture out of the way, Trudeau would meet provincial premiers again to work on a formula for changing the law at home.

That federal-provincial conference would follow the election within 60 days and, if the leaders managed to agree, "we will uncork the champagne," Trudeau said.

But should these talks founder once more — there have been 10 unsuccessful attempts at constitutional reform in the last 52 years — he would begin a two-year hunt for a new solution.

If the two sides reached an impasse, Ottawa would ask Canadians through a referendum to decide on a future formula for changing the constitution.

Their decision would be binding on federal and provincial governments.

Trudeau made the comments during a detailed 75-minute elaboration of proposals he sketched Wednesday in Toronto to a crowd of 18,000 in Maple Leaf Gardens.

Abandoning his fighting style of the previous night, Trudeau spoke conversationally, methodically outlining points for and against constitutional reform. His spoke mainly in French, with only a smattering of English, drawing subdued, attentive response.

Clark, interviewed in Charlottetown, said Trudeau is holding "a gun to the heads of the premiers" by threatening unilateral action on patriating the Canadian constitution.

Responding to Trudeau's threat to hold a national referendum on bringing the constitution home, Clark said he is opposed to the use of a referendum, except in specific cases defined by law.

Such a case could be a referendum held in response to a vote for separation in Quebec, Clark said, adding he would favor a national referendum in that case.

The federal government allowed its general referendum bill to die on the order paper before the end of the last parliamentary session.

The Conservatives opposed the bill and suggested amendments limiting what Clark called "the immense power" the bill would give given the federal government. Clark said he would not re-introduce the referendum bill if he were elected

After the Wounds, a Soothing Victory

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

A month ago the New Democrats were a divided party in Esquimalt-Port Renfrew, but Thursday night the party workers cheered together for Frank Mitchell — the man they'd united to elect.

For Mitchell, a veteran Esquimalt police sergeant, it was a sweet victory over Socred Lyle Kahl who'd edged him by 121 votes in 1975. And it meant a return to the legislature where he last sat for a brief spell in 1952.

Over-all it was a triumph for the NDP's riding organizers because the party had split badly in late March when the nomination battle between Mitchell and hopeful John Brewin erupted into open warfare.

A one-vote victory gave Mitchell the nod, but Brewin supporters protested and called on the party's provincial executive to nullify the ballot. They later withdrew that request.

But all those wounds were healed when Mitchell claimed Esquimalt-Port Renfrew for the NDP with a substantial margin.

In his victory speech, delivered from atop a table in the Boilermakers Hall on Esquimalt Riad, Mitchell praised party workers for forgetting their differences and closing ranks against the Socreds.

He had special thanks for Brewin, saying his former opponent's work in Sooke had swung that key poll.

"I want to thank you for all the work you did. You put it (Sooke) together and won it," Mitchell later told Brewin on the phone.

Toasting the boisterous crowd with Cordon Rouge in a plastic cup, Mitchell said: "We, the people of this riding won this election because we worked like hell."

Later, in a more subdued address, Mitchell said: "There were a lot of disagreements. We got to points where we hated each other . . . but we got it together and when you get this far it sure feels good."

Mitchell's election marks the first time in 28 years that the riding has elected an opposition member. But the poll results came as small surprise to the party faithful. They jammed into the hall, sipped beer, and watched calmly as Mitchell forged ahead. Early in the evening it was obvious they had a winner and the television-watching crowd saved its wild cheers for the Victoria race where Charles Barber and Gordon Hanson were scoring an NDP sweep.

Things went a little crazy at about 10:30 when Mitchell marched into the hall, his arms aloft. He was mobbed and lifted on to a table along with key party organizers.

Mitchell told the crowd the fight had just begun. He said for the next three years NDP supporters should work to consolidate the party's hold on the riding and that the next time around he wanted to be sitting with an NDP government.

A short time later Kahl arrived at the hall. There were a few whistles of derision as he pushed his way through the crowd towards Mitchell, but mostly he met with handshakes and slaps on the back.

He congratulated Mitchell. The two men stood with their hands clasped for a few minutes, Mitchell leaning close to hear Kahl whose laryngitis-hit voice could barely be heard in the commotion. Then the defeated MLA slipped away and headed for retirement.

He said he planned to do some fishing with his two sons, but hadn't thought further ahead than that.

He admitted some shock.

"I was more surprised than I was disappointed," he said. "There were a large number of people in the constituency that I was counting on but . . . well, we'll just have to take a look at the polls and see what went wrong."

In an interview Mitchell said he thought the difference was that the NDP workers had put out more.

The New Democrats had a campaign task force of 600 "and when you get that many people pulling in the same direction you can't help but win."

Sweet kiss, delicious win for Curtis

He'll Drink to That!

Water Line Helped Curtis Douse Mika Bid

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

He was drinking coffee, his ecstatic campaign workers were swigging rye or beer but for Hugh Curtis Thursday night the magic potion was water — cool, clear, Sooke Lake water.

As Curtis held his Saanich-The Islands seat for Social Credit, the NDP's John Mika attributed the win largely to Curtis's prime-mover role in providing a piped water supply to the often-parched Saanich Peninsula.

"Peninsula water (the piped extension from the Greater Victoria water system) was his ace card," Mika told a dejected supporter.

It was an opinion shared by most people, including Curtis himself, and confirmed by the results.

Mika generally fared well in the southern, more populous part of the sprawling riding and gave Curtis a close fight in a number of Gulf Island areas. But voters in the peninsula communities turned out in heavy numbers for the man who, more than any other, had assured an end to their reliance on uncertain well supplies.

In the quiet, sombre group at Mika's campaign office on McKenzie, the party's 1975 candidate summed it up.

As Carol Pickup stared at the individual poll results on the big board she mused aloud: "If only we could have cut off Saanich-The Islands at Royal Oak we would have done very nicely . . ."

As it was, Mika, the Saanich alderman and former newspaperman, succeeded in almost halving the 4,000-vote gap that separated Curtis and Pickup in the 1975 provincial election.

In his headquarters exactly a mile away on Douglas, Curtis conceded that this, his 10th election in a 17-year career in municipal and provincial politics, was a tough battle.

And he readily agreed that the water line helped him enormously.

"The single most important issue in the 1975 election was the uncertainty of water supply on the peninsula," he recalled. "We started in January, 1976, to work on that — it should have been done 30 years ago."

Curtis was given a riotous reception when he arrived at about 9:40 p.m. Heading the welcoming committee were his wife Sheila and three children — Gary, 21, Dave, 17 and Sue, 15.

After engaging in a head-tousling fight with his bushy-haired sons, Curtis quipped: "When you've got as little hair as I have you can't tell them to get haircuts."

Mika phoned to concede defeat shortly after 10. In thanking his campaign workers, Curtis predicted that the Socreds' reduced majority would ensure for B.C. "a very good legislature."

At one point deafening cheers interrupted his comments, as a television announcer said Curtis's cabinet colleague Bill Vander Zalm was leading the race in Surrey.

"That's good news," Curtis said, "but I will continue to disagree with him on certain things."

Unlike his obviously depressed supporters, Mika appeared to take his defeat fairly philosophically.

"I expected all along we would more less split Saanich itself and the southern part of the riding, that we'd have the edge on the islands and it would be decided on the peninsula," he said.

Mika also said Curtis had the benefit of some useful pre-election "ink" with announcements about the purchase of additional acreage on Sidney Island and his intention to ask for the dismissal of some Human Rights Commission members.

But he said he took some satisfaction from the fact that the NDP had done better in Saanich-The Islands than ever before.

His wife, Peggy, entered the headquarters a little after 9 o'clock, after travelling from a Vancouver convention where she is running for president of the Registered Nurses Association of B.C.

"We came close, honey, but we didn't make it," Mika told her.

Meanwhile, the third candidate, Conservative John Green, was left out in the cold with little more than 2,300 votes.

Green said he was expecting less polarization in this election, not more.

His closing prediction: "The present situation makes it inevitable that we will have, at some point down the road, a large NDP majority whenever the voters are of a mind to dispose of the present government."

Smith Scores Easy Win As Tory Chief Runs Last

By MIKE HUGHES
Times Staff

Conservative leader Vic Stephens was unceremoniously dumped by Oak Bay-Gordon Head voters in Thursday's election as Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith chalked up a resounding win for the Socreds.

Most pundits had predicted a close fight, but Smith, a 44-year-old lawyer, ran away with it, getting more than twice as many votes as Stephens.

The other surprise in the riding was the success of Muriel Overgaard, the NDP candidate who came in second, more than 400 votes ahead of the Tory leader.

The final results were: Smith, 12,551; Overgaard, 6,577; Stephens, 6,165.

Stephens told a crowd of about 65 party supporters he was surprised by the outcome but that it isn't the end of his political career nor does it mark the demise of the Conservative party in B.C.

"Let's stay in there," he urged.

The 48-year-old lawyer appeared shaken by the results and said he and his party were tossed out because of a trend toward polarized politics in B.C.

"The people of B.C. are not prepared to accept the Progressive Conservatives under my leadership."

Over at the Smith headquarters it was all jubilation as party organizers were pleasantly surprised at the success of their candidate.

Smith told a happy, celebrating crowd of about 200 that "this is a great evening for us."

In an interview, he said there were no doubt a number of factors which contributed to his victory including his record as mayor for the past four years and alderman before that.

"People wanted to elect somebody that is sensitive to the community," he said.

"Maybe they felt more comfortable with me."

Smith also praised the more than 400 people who worked on his campaign and said their efforts plus the fact that he was able to meet a lot of people personally helped him turn turn things around.

Overgaard, a secretary at Cedar Hill junior secondary school, said she felt very satisfied with the results.

She said she felt during her canvas of the riding that people were supporting her because she focussed on the issues more than the Tories and Socreds.

She expressed surprise that Stephens didn't do better.

Since 1969, Oak Bay had gone more or less solidly Social Credit or Tory under Scott Wallace.

But in the March, 1978, byelection, when Stephens was first elected MLA, that trend appeared to be changing with the NDP picking up a larger percentage of the vote and that pattern was maintained in Thursday's election.

Stephens said he was convinced B.C. voters would reverse the trend to polarized politics this time and vote for a third-party.

"Instead the situation is more polarized than ever."

Stephens said it is not his style to quit.

"I'm going to stay in there and fight," he said, adding that there might be a byelection down the road somewhere and he would be prepared to run again.

Some observers felt Stephens lost the vote of a number of staunch party supporters when he accused the federal Tories of making "secret deals" with the Socreds.

But the Tory leader said he didn't regret what he did. "If I'm going to lose it is going to be on my own terms."

Smith said during the campaign that if he won he would step down as mayor when his term runs out in November and also quit his law practice. He also promised to set up a constituency office in the riding.

Difficult Job but Great Rewards

elizabeth forbes

Being a good foster parent is one of the hardest jobs in the world, but one of the most rewarding.

Margaret Tibbitt, supervisor in the resources and placement section of the ministry of human resources, uses those words over and over again as she conducts on-going fostering courses throughout the year.

Right now she is preparing for the final course before a summer break.

It starts with an information and registration night May 22 and continues with four weekly sessions, all in the human resources building at 1627 Fort starting at 7:30 p.m.

Anyone living in the capital region, including the Gulf Islands and everything south of the Malahat, is eligible to attend.

Marg Tibbitt explains these are the only courses of their kind on fostering in B.C.

Then she adds that while they are important from the angle of preparing people to become foster parents, those who attend are not obligated to do so.

"Some merely want to learn more about children, or perhaps about parenting and how to relate to their own families.

"It's a plus for us if they decide to take on a fostering role."

Marg Tibbitt (centre) and foester parents Herman and Helen Bickel

She describes the ideal foster parent as warm, loving, accepting people, with the capacity to give much and expect little in return, and with a desire to help a child fulfil its needs, not their own.

They must be ready to provide good substitute parenting by meeting the physical, emotional and social needs of children placed in the home and to perform the nurturing functions normally performed by a child's natural parents.

Good foster parents must also present identification models of positive adult functions by which children may pattern their own lives constructively. And they must continue to increase parental skills and to assist the social worker in developing the best future plans for children placed in the home.

Many of the children — even pre-schoolers — have emotional problems.

Who wouldn't, Marg Tibbitt asks, after what some of them have been through?

Returning to the upcoming course on fostering she explains that resource persons working with her include Ron Pollard, long-term foster-care supervisor; social worker Elizabeth Williams and experienced foster parents like Helen and Herman Bickel, who have five children of their own and three foster children.

An advisory committee includes Mavis Dean, president of the Capital Region Foster Parents Association, and Bernice Packford, supervisor of the parent recruitment program.

The course starts on information and registration night with a talk on what fostering is all about and a quick look at a foster family.

At the first two weekly sessions there will be discussion on such questions as why do parents need foster care for their children, legal aspects, separation and what it means to a child, ages and stages, and rules and what they mean to the child.

Third meeting deals with the importance of roots and with teamwork planning — social worker, foster family, natural family, school and community — as it affects the child.

Final session will take a look at placement, the mechanics of fostering and how to help the child feel happy when referred to a foster home.

There will also be a brief ceremony in which certificates will be presented to all who have completed the course.

Films and video tapes are used to flesh out the various discussions.

If you are interested and would like further information about the upcoming course, telephone 598-5121, the human resources junction centre.

Right now there are approximately 850 foster children in the capital region, Marg Tibbitt points out.

Some remain in foster care for only a few weeks or months. Others, whose parents can no longer take care of them, may stay in care for many years or be adopted.

A few are babies but the majority are older.

Those in greatest need of foster homes are children over 10 years of age, children with physical or mental handicaps and children from one family who should be kept together.

Returning to her belief that foster parenting is one of the hardest jobs in the world, but also the most rewarding she concludes with:

"It's socializing a three-year-old who needs a regular home routine. It's showing an eight-year-old that you won't send him away because he is naughty. It's helping a teen-ager understand why stealing is unnecessary."

Stress Not All Over Exams

LETHBRIDGE, Alta. (CP) — People take for granted that university students are under the greatest psychological and emotional stress during the weeks leading up to final examinations.

But a University of Lethbridge counsellor says the opposite is true — most of the problems come in the slack months such as early October and early January.

"During a lull when they've come to focus on themselves is when the trouble starts," says Joel Brass, crisis counsellor for the university.

When students ar busy academically they don't have time to dwell on personal problems, or else they forget them completely, he says.

Often, the superficial problem which brings a student in for counselling is not important. The real problems are lack of self-esteem and a concern about the meaning of their work at university, says Brass.

"A big question for a lot of them is: 'Am I smart enough to cut the mustard?' " he says. "There's a lot of ego involved in proving themselves."

Once the real problem is uncovered, alleviating stress is easier.

Brass says current university students are a different breed from those of the 1960s, subject to different pressures.

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market inched higher despite several reports by influential business organizations predicting a recession during the second half of 1979.

The Business Council, composed of top corporate executives, predicted a brief recession would strike during the second half. But Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal and Federal Reserve Board Chairman G. William Miller said the Carter administration and the Fed still expect a recession can be avoided.

Citibank said a recession will begin "in the next few months." The downturn will be "distinctly worse" than those of 1960 or 1970, but "not nearly as bad" as the recession of 1973-1975, it said.

Merrill Lynch Economics' analysts said, meanwhile, Federal Reserve Board credit-tightening actions may ensure "a recession by year-end."

Gaming industry issues were higher in active trading. Bally added 1⅜ to $64. It said its shareholders will be offered the chance to buy up to17 percent of its Atlantic City, N.J., subsidiary.

The NYSE's composite common-stock index was unchanged at 55.45.

London

LONDON (Reuter) — The London stock market was mixed at the close of light trading.

The Financial Times Index of 30 industrials closed at 532.8, up 0.1.

Oils and banks were down while golds were mixed.

Canadian shares eased.
